

Univ.of Toronto Library

Shakespeare's Centurie of Prayse.

Shakespeare's Centurie of Prayse;

BEING

Materials for a History of Opinion on Shakespeare and his Works,

Culled from Writers of the first Century after his Rise.

Praestanti tibi maturos largimur honores, Jurandasque tuum per nomen ponimus aras, Nil oriturum alias, nil ortum tale fatentes.

Horat. Epist., lib. ii, ep. i, l. 73.

LONDON:

FOR THE EDITOR:

Printed by Josiah Allen, of Birmingham, & published by Trübner & Co., 57 & 59, Ludgate Hill.

1874.

[ALL RIGHTS RESERVED.]

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2010 with funding from University of Toronto

CORRECTIONS

TO

SHAKESPEARE'S CENTURIE OF PRAYSE.

PAGE	LINE	•
36	I 2	for 'The'	read	'He'
37	last	,, '10'	,,	' 7 '
75	11	, ' V '	;,	'IV'
76	17	"'Mere's'	,,	'Meres''
75	14	"'20'	,,	'2I'
168	14	" 'Vefpatiar	ı',,	' Vefpafian '
173	11	"'generis'	59	'genere'
180	9	"'John'	,,	'George'
186	penul	t.,, 'proved'		'proves'
2 I I	2	"'joyn''	,,	ʻjoyn'd'
229	20	after 'after'	add 't	he first closing'
281	11	for 'quis' rea	ıd 'qu	i '
300	9	after 'Dedica	tion' a	dd 'of'
309	1	for WILLIA	M rea	ad GERARD *
321	33	omit 'Brit. A	Ius.'
323	22	after 'See' ac	dd ' E_{ℓ}	d. Burmann,'
354	2	for 'William'	read	'Gerard'
359	3	"'Cythia'	,, '(Cynthia'

Two paffages referred to on pp. 73 and 80 were ultimately excluded from our Supplementary Extracts. They are indicated on p. 358 as Irrelevant Allufions.

Other corrections are noted on pp. 187, 318, 319, and in the notes on pp. 345—349. That on p. 84 is itself incorrect: for the Prologue to Every Man in his Humour is not, as far as we can ascertain, in any 4to edition of that play.

^{*} To be cut out and mounted upon the misprinted name, which intruded here by an evil fate. The name is right on p. 234.

CORRECTIONS

SHAKESPARES CENT AIL OF TRAISE

				7 97 1
cad He				36
, , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , ,	.01.		1:61	71.
4.7.5
Teoreta	101/	.,	7.1	76
.15.	, J.		‡ 1	75
ำสาร์โดยปุ่ง	· Veijutiun		1.1	163
11111
Ogrem).				180
· 5707q*	hoverq;		0.100	150
. joyn'd				115
the first closing				(, 5 !!
qui	duis, rend.	for	3.1	281
	$sc^{\prime}Dallanlio$			000
read GERARD				90%
	it - 1397/ 1770		3.3	321
Ed. Burmann!	r See' add	afte	: 2	323
id (letard)	William re:	उली		354
	Cylhia".		ξ.	359
•

Two paffages referred to on pp. 73 and 86 were ultimately excluded from our supplementary Extracts. They are indicated on p. 358 as Hardwood Militings.

Other corrections are noted on pp. 187, 318, 319, and in the notes on pp. 345-349. That on p. 84 is itself incorrect: for the Prologue to Krery Man in his Humour is not, as far as we can ascertain, in any 4to edition of that play.

^{*} To be cut out and mounted upon the misprinted name, which intruded here by an evil sate. The name is right on p. 234.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

						PAGE
Forespeech	-	-	-	•	vii-	-xx
Period I. 1592—1616	-	-	-	-	-	I
Elucidations to Period I	-	-	-	-	-	69
Period II. 1616-1642	-	-	-	-	-	85
Elucidations to Period II	-	-	-	-	-	161
Period III. 1642—1660	-	-	-	-	-	189
Elucidations to Period III	-	-	-	-	-	227
Period IV. 1660—1693 -	-	-	-	-	-	237
Elucidations to Period IV	-	-	-	-		313
Supplementary Extracts	-	-	~	-	-	325
Elucidations to Supplementary Ex	tra	cts	-	-	-	339
Additions and Corrections to Eluc	ida	tioi	ıs	-	-	345
Index to Authors	-	-	-	-	-	351
Index to Authors' Initials	-	-	-	-		356
Index to Anonymous Works -	-	-	-	-	-	357
List of Exclusions	-	-	-	-	-	358
Postscript	-	_		-	-	361

Forespeech.

--()---

LL is not "Prayse" that is celebrated in the enfuing pages: but the prevailing character of the parts may fairly be allowed to give defignation to the The experience of the two years during which the editor has been engaged upon this work has prepared him for the discovery that many links in the chain of allusion to Shakespeare have been omitted. It were furely unnecessary for him to have undertaken fuch a work to convince himfelf of his liability to overfight and error. Yet as furely, if he had the conceit of regarding himself as nothing if not critical, and worse than nothing if not accurate, as being beyond, not indeed the poffibility, but the danger, of making mistakes, there is no surer help for his malady than the attempt to execute a complete catena of extracts relating to one man, ftretching through a century of obfolete or obsolescent literature. The editor never rightly estimated the difficulty of making an exact copy or a perfect collation, to fay nothing of other and greater difficulties that infest this kind of work, until he had partly executed Shakespeare's Centurie of Prayse. At its commencement he felt confidence in his ability to make the collection nearly exhaustive: but as it received, from time to time during the process of printing, fresh accessions of material, he gradually allowed refignation to usurp the place of hope, and looked no longer for "the praise of perfection." *

^{*} The difficulty of completing fuch a work on a pre-arranged plan is shown by the fact somewhat irregularly recorded on p. 338, and further by the discovery of a contemporary mention of Shakespeare, which was brought under our notice after that page had been printed. It occurs in the following passage:

[&]quot;Our moderne, and prefent excellent Poets which worthely florish in their owne workes, and all of them in my owne knowledge lived togeather in this Queenes raigne, according to their priorities as neere as I could, I have orderly fet downe (viz) George Gascoigne Esquire, Thomas Church-yard Esquire, fir Edward Dyer Knight, Edmond Spencer Esquire, fir Philips Sidney Knight, Sir John Harrington Knight, Sir Thomas Challoner Knight, Sir Franceis Bacon Knight, & Sir John Davic Knight, Master John Lillie gentleman, Maister George Chapman gentleman, M. W. Warner gentleman, M. Willi.

Should this book reach a fecond edition, it may, by renewed refearches, be rendered very nearly complete. The editor does not expect that much retrenchment is possible. The number of doubtful extracts included in it does not exceed half a dozen (they occur on pp. 7, 10, 12–13, 19, 20, and 33). But it is impossible to doubt that there is yet much gleaning to be done on the less frequented fields of the relative literature.

The catena constituting the Centurie is supplemented by a small collection of extracts which had been overlooked by the editor, or were discovered too late for insertion in their proper places. His object has been to make the collection as complete and correct as possible; and he has accordingly proclaimed such of his own omissions and mistakes as came to his knowledge before the publication of the book. With all its defects, it is certainly far in advance of anything of the kind that has hitherto been attempted. Garrick's collection, the first that was published, was exceedingly meagre; and those of Drake and Malone not much more extensive. The extracts given in the last chapter of Book IX and the first of Book XI of Knight's Shakfpere Studies are a mere felection to ferve a purpose, and are often inaccurately given. The late Mr. Bolton Corney, the Rev. Alexander B. Grofart of Blackburn, and Mr. George Dawson of Birmingham, have, each at a different time. projected a History of Opinion on Shakespeare and his works: but all their defigns were either frustrated or delayed, and were not executed. Mr. Grofart's Contemporary Judgments of Poets, announced four years ago, feems to have fhared the fame fate; but it will fome day, we hope, be carried out. Should that work be published, we may expect to find in that portion of it which will concern our bard fome of the links missing from this catena: but also (if we may judge from Mr. Grofart's own deliverances) fome extracts which only the most indulgent explorer would venture to count among notices of Shakespeare.

Shakespeare gentleman, Samuell Daniell Esquire, Michaell Draiton Esquire, of the bath, M. Christopher Marlo gen. M. Benjamine Jonso geleman, John Marston Esquier, M. Abraham Frauncis gen. master Frauncis Meers gentle. master Josua Silvester gentle. master Thomas Deckers gentleman, M. John Webster gentleman, M. Thomas Heywood gentleman, M. Thomas Middleton gentleman, M. George Withers."—John Stow's Annales, 1615, p. 811. (Reign of Queen Elizabeth.)

Incomplete as the enfuing collection must be, it is fufficiently extensive to afford both positive and negative evidence as to the estimation in which Shakespeare was held by the writers of the century during which his fame was germinating; viz., 1592-1693. It is, in fact, praise, and in some few cases dispraise, and not yet fame, that is shown in the fubfequent testimonies. They bear witness to fubjective opinions, preparing the way for the objective judgment which has feated Shakespeare on the Throne of Poets. The absence of fundry great names with which no pains of refearch, fcrutiny, or study could connect the most trivial allusion to the bard or his works (fuch, e.g., as Lord Brooke, Lord Bacon, Selden, Sir John Beaumont, Henry Vaughan,* and Lord Clarendon) is tacitly fignificant: the iteration of the same vapid and affected compliments, couched in conventional terms,

^{*} The following extract will ferve at once to exemplify a possible allusion to Shakespeare: which if actual would relieve Vaughan from the charge of ignoring Shakespeare.

[&]quot;The first that with any effectual success attempted a diversion of this foul and overslowing stream, was the blessed man, Mr. George Herbert, whose holy life and verse gained many pious converts—of whom I am the least—and gave the first check to a most slourishing and advanced wit of his time."—Silex Scintillans: or Sacred Poens and Private Ejaculations, by Henry Vaughan, Silvrist. 1650. [12mo.]

from writers of the first two periods,-comparing Shakespeare's "tongue," "pen," or "vein," to filver, honey, fugar, or nectar, while they ignore his greater and diftinguishing qualities, is expressly fignificant. It is plain, for one thing, that the bard of our admiration was unknown to the men of that age, though it is undeniable that his supremacy in some important respects was at length recognised by Ben Jonson, and subsequently by Milton and Dryden. How could it well be other-Men of genius, like them, could no wife? more be blind to the genius of Shakespeare than could Wagner and Gounod be infensible to the orchestral excellence of Mendelssohn. Differing as the editor does from many of the conclusions of Mr. Gerald Massey, he is the more pleafed to find himfelf at one with him here.* Affuredly no one during the

^{*} In allufion to Spenfer's Teares of the Muses, Mr. Maffey writes thus:

[&]quot;But we may fafely fay that no man living in 1590 ever faw Shakespeare as the 'man whom Nature's self had made to mock herself, and truth to imitate."

And again-

[&]quot;Harvey's lufty réveille and Ben Jonson's eulogy notwithftanding, it is quite demonstrable that Shakespeare's contemporaries had no adequate conception of what manner of man or majesty of mind were amongst them. We know him better than they did!" The Secret Drama of Shakespeare's Sonnets, &c. 1872. pp. 511 & 528.

"Centurie" had any fuspicion that the genius of Shakespeare was unique, and that he was fui generis—i. e., the only exemplar of his species. Those who ranked him very high compared him to Spenser, Sidney, Chapman, Jonson, Fletcher, and even lesser lights, and most of the judges of that time assigned the first place to one of them.

We do not look for Shakespeare's name in books on poets and poetry which were issued before 1593, when his Venus and Adonis, "the first heir of [his] invention," was iffued: fo that we are not furprifed at the filence of William Webbe (1586), George Puttenham (1589), Sir John Harrington (1591), and Sir Philip Sidney (1595). Shakefpeare could hardly have been known to any of them. But the cafe is otherwise with works of the same character issued as late as 1598, the year in which was published a collection of fatires called Skialethia: the fixth of which contains the names of Chaucer, Gower, Daniel, Markham, Drayton, and Sidney,but not that of Shakespeare. Ben Jonson, writing fome forty years later, makes the fame remarkable omiffion: in his Difcoveries (Præcipiendi modi) he remarks that "as it is fit to read the best authors to youth first, so let them be of the openest and clearest;" and he specifies Sidney, Donne, Gower, Chaucer, and Spenfer,-but not Shakespeare. Nash feems to have divided the palm between Spenfer and Peele; but he wrote a little too early for Shakespeare. Richard Carew assigns the first place to Sidney, in which judgment he was, perhaps, influenced by their early friendship at Oxford. Davison and a host of others fet an extravagant value on Daniel. The elder Baffe, Taylor (the ferryman), and Edward Phillips feem to put Spenfer and Shakespeare on an equality. Spenfer himfelf, Webster, and Camden, after enumerating various contemporary poets, apologetically give the last place to Shakespeare, the two former employing the proverbial phrase "last not least," or an equivalent. It would be hard to find any grudge or unfairness towards him in all this dealing: on the contrary, if by many he was ignored, he was ignored with other poets of good repute, and affuredly by many he was confidered as a formidable rival to Spenfer and Sidney in one branch of the art, and to Lilly, Peele, Chapman, and Jonson in another. praise was indeed most inadequate; but it would reverse the order of nature if a poet were to attain to fame per faltum, to be recognifed for what he is, and appreciated at his true value, before fuch lapfe of time as is fufficient for the formation of a ripe and obiective school of criticism. If, as Mr. Charles Knight concludes, "he was always in the heart of the people" (Shakfpere Studies, 1851, p. 504), that fact fpeaks more for Shakespeare as a showman than for Shakespeare as a man of genius. Doubtless he knew his men; but affuredly his men did not know him. The drift of his plays was in a manner intelligible, or they would not have been entertaining, to the penny-knaves who pestered the Globe and Blackfriars Theatres. But his profound reach of thought and his unrivalled knowledge of human nature were as far beyond the vulgar ken, as were the higher graces of his poetry. It is to men of fenfibility and education that Shakespeare appeals as a man of genius; and it is to the literate class we must look for the impress of that genius.

Amidst the discordant voices of praise and of blame, the echoes of antiquated compliment mingled with the pedantic censure and fanatic eulogy of later times, it has been difficult to bring sobriety of judgment and purity of taste to bear on Shakespeare's writings. We are at length flowly rounding to a just estimate of his works; and the time seems to be at hand when men of culture will attribute to the object of their admiration a much higher range of powers than were requisite for the production of the most popular and successful dramas in the world.

A few words in conclusion on the notices which constitute this catena. Of course it begins with the earliest known allusions to Shakespeare, viz., those in 1592. In strictness it should end before the publication of the first systematic critique on Shakespeare: for the inclusion of all such would be to reprint a library. Now "Dryden," as Samuel Johnson says (Preface to his Shakespeare, 1765), "may be properly considered as the father of English Criticism, as the writer who first taught us to determine upon principles the merit of composition:" and Dryden's only systematic essay on Shakespeare is the Presace to his own Troilus and Creffida, printed in 1679. having given fo many of Dryden's remarks on Shakespeare, the editor thought he was justified in reprinting, in an abridged form, that remarkable effay, which in the quarto of 1679 occupies fifteen pages. He has fo far, then, departed from his prospectus, and included in his collection a formal and lengthy criticism. That being so, Dryden's effay will ferve to make his position the clearer: to exhibit an exceptional fample of the work he professes to exclude, and thus to bring home to every reader the necessity of the rule which excludes works of that class. After Dryden, the first formal critics are Rymer and Dennis. The work of Rymer which Dryden refers to in the Preface to Troilus and Creffida is that from which we have given the only extracts referring to Shakespeare, viz., The Tragedies of the last Age considered and examined by the Practice of the Ancients, 1678. His Short View of Tragedy, 1693, and The Impartial Critick of Dennis, 1693, and all subsequent publications are excluded. Yet through the editor's decifion to admit every work of Dryden's which deals with or alludes to Shakespeare, this catena extends into the year 1693; for the Epistle to Sir Godfrey Kneller was written in that year: and thus he is enabled to include the important letter of John Dowdall to the Rev. Edward Southwell. This pre-critical century naturally divides itself into four periods: the first extending from the earliest allusion to Shakespeare till his death in 1616: the fecond from his death to the outbreak of the Civil War in 1642: the third from the closing of the theatres to the Restoration: and the fourth extends from the return of the Merry Monarch to the rife of criticism. After this Shakespeare's fame as a classic really began. We are commencing with that century when rumour had hardly begun her work, and when his poems were read, and his plays feen, as matters which belonged to the age, and not as "works" for all time.

The editor has excluded from the catena all documentary notices of Shakespeare; for, besides being foreign to its scope, they are fufficiently numerous and extensive to form a considerable volume by themselves.*

In garnering fo large a harvest he has received kind and efficient help from many friends. He has usually gone to the fountainhead for the extract employed: but when occasional impediments—as distance, preoccupation, or fickness—hindered him in this, he relied on the copy or collation of a friend. For fuch work he is chiefly indebted to W. S. W. VAUX, Efg., F.R.S., and to W. B. RyE, Efg., the Keeper of the Printed Books of the British Museum. To J. O. Phillipps (HALLIWELL), Efg., F.R.S., he is indebted for many references which he would otherwife have overlooked, and for having fo liberally placed at his disposal the wood-cut forming the frontispice to the large-paper copies. He owes to his lamented friend, the late ^{*} Perhaps the most curious of these is one of the answers of Shakespeare's granddaughter, the widow of Thomas Nash, to a suit preferred by Edward Nash (Chancery Proceedings, N. N. 17, No. 65); where we read that New Place was "the Inheritance of William Shakespear the Desends Grandsather whoe was seized thereof in Fee simple long before the Desends marriage wth the said Thomas Nashe." This answer is dated April 17, 24 Caroli. As James died March 26, 1625, the 24th year of Charles would have ended on March 27, 1649; but it actually ended on January 30, 1649, by the king's decapitation; so that the date of the answer is April 17, 1648.

HOWARD STAUNTON, Efq., a felicitous amendment of the head-title, and three valuable extracts. His thanks are also due to Mr. C. Edmonds and Mr. R. K. Dent (both of Birmingham) for numerous extracts, and to the Rev. H. A. Holden, LL.D., for revising those of his notes which deal with the learned languages.

C. M. INGLEBY.

Valentines, Ilford, Oct. 16th, 1874.

ROBERT GREENE, 1592.

ASE minded men al three of you, if by my miferie ye be not warned: for unto none of you (like me) fought those burres to cleave: those Puppits (I meane) that speake from our mouths, those Anticks garnisht in our colours. Is it not strange that I, to whom they al have beene beholding: is it not like that you, to whome they all have beene beholding, shall (were ye in that case that I am now) be both at once of them forfaken? Yes trust them not: for there is an upftart Crow, beautified with our feathers, that with his Tygers heart wrapt in a Players hide, supposes he is as well able to bumbast out a blanke verse as the best of you: and being an absolute Johannes fac totum, is in his owne conceit the onely Shake-scene in a O that I might intreate your rare countrie. wits to be imployed in more profitable courfes: & let those Apes imitate your past excellence, and never more acquaint them with your admired inventions. I know the best husband of you all will never prouve an Usurer, and the kindest of them all wil never proove a kinde nurse: yet whilst you may, seeke you better Maisters; for it is pittie men of such rare wits, should be subject to the pleasures of such rude groomes.

In this I might infert two more that both have writ against these buckram Gentlemen; but let their owne works serve to witnesse against their owne wickednesse, if they persever to maintaine any more such peasants. For other new commers, I leave them to the mercie of these painted monsters, who (I doubt not) will drive the best minded to despise them; for the rest it skils not though they make a jeast at them.

Green's Groats-worth of Wit; bought with a Million of Repentaunce. 1596.

HENRY CHETTLE, SEPT.—DEC., 1592.

ITH neither of them that take offence was I acquainted, and with one of them I care not if I never be: The other, whome at that time I did not fo much spare, as since I wish I had, for that as I have moderated the heate of living writers, and might have usde my owne discretion (especially in fuch a case) the Author beeing dead, that I did not, I am as fory, as if the original fault had beene my fault, because my selse have feene his demeanor no lesse civill than he exelent in the qualitie he professes: Besides, divers of worship have reported, his uprightnes of dealing, which argues his honesty, and his facetious grace in writting, that aprooves his Art.

Kind-Harts Dreame. [n.d. 1600. 4to.] To the Gentlemen Readers. p. 2.

HENRY CHETTLE, 1603.

OR doth the filver tonged Melicert,

Drop from his honied muse one fable teare

To mourne her death that graced his defert, And to his laies opend her Royall eare. Shepheard remember our Elizabeth, And fing her Rape, done by that Tarquin, Death.

Englandes Mourning Garment. [Anon. n.d. 1603. 410.]

1603-1604.

OU Poets all, brave Shakespeare, Johnson, Green, Bestow your time to write for England's Queene.

Lament, lament, &c.

Returne your fongs and Sonnets and your layes

To fet forth fweet Elizabeth[a]'s praise. Lament, lament, &c.

A mourneful Dittie entituled Elizabeth's losse, together with a welcome to King James.
[Anon. n.d.]

GABRIEL HARVEY, 1592.

OOD fweete Oratour, be a devine Poet indeede: and use heavenly

Eloquence indeede: and employ thy golden talent with amounting usance indeede: and with heroicall Cantoes honour right Vertue, & brave valour indeede: as noble Sir Philip Sidney, and gentle Maister Spencer have done, with immortall Fame: and I will bestow more complements of rare amplifications upon thee, then ever any bestowed uppon them: or this Tounge ever affoorded: or any Aretinish mountaine of huge exaggerations can bring-foorth. Right artificiality, (whereat I once aimed to the uttermost power of my slender capacity,) is not mad-brained, or ridiculous, or abfurd, or blasphemous, or monstrous: but deepe-conceited, but pleasurable, but delicate, but exquifite, but gratious, but admirable: not according to the fantasticall mould of Aretine, or Rabelays, but according to the fine modell of Orpheus, Homer, Pindarus, & the excel-

For I dare not name the Honorabler Sonnes & Nobler Daughters of the fweetest, & divinest Muses, that ever sang in English or lentest wittes of Greece, and of the Lande, that flowed with milk, and honv.

other language: for feare of suspition of that, which I abhorre: and their owne most delectable, and delicious Exercifes, (the fine handyworke of excellent Nature, and excellenter Arte combined) speake incomparably more, then I am able briefly to infinuate. mindes, and flourishing wittes, were infinitely to-blame, if they should not also for curious imitation, propose unto themselves such faire Types of refined, and engraced Eloquence. The right Noovice of pregnante, and aspiring conceit, wil not over-skippe any precious gemme of Invention, or any beautiful floure of Elocution, that may richly adorne, or gallantly bedecke the trimme garland of his budding stile. I speake generally to every fpringing wit: but more specially to a few: and at this inflante fingularly to one; whom I falute with a hundred bleffings: and entreate with as many prayers, to love them, that love all good wittes: and hate none, but the Devell, and his incarnate Impes, notorioufly professed. London: this 8 & 9 of September.

The frend of his frendes, & foe of none.

Four Letters, and Certaine Sonnets: efpecially touching Robert Greene, and other parties, by him abused. 1592. Third Letter, pp. 48, 49.

GABRIEL HARVEY, 1598.

HE younger fort take much delight in Shakespeare's Venus and Adonis; but his Lucrece, and his tragedy of Hamlet Prince of Denmarke, have it in them to please the wifer fort, 1598.

> Manuscript Note in Speght's Chaucer. First printed in Steeven's Shakspeare. 1766. (Reed, xviii, 2; Boswell's Malone, vii, 168; Drake, ii, 391, &c.)

RICHARD CAREW, 1595-1600.

DDE hereunto, that whatfoever grace any other language carrieth in verse or profe, in Tropes or Metaphors, in Ecchoes and Agnominations, they may all be lively and exactly represented in ours: will you have Platoes veine? reade Sir Tho. Smith.—the Ionicke? Sir Thomas Moore.— Ciceroes? Afcham. - Varro? Chaucer.-Demosthenes? Sir John Cheeke (who in his treatife to the Rebels, hath comprifed all the figures of Rhetorick. Will you reade Virgil? take the Earle of Surrey.—Catullus? Shakespeare and Barlows fragment,—Ovid? Daniel. — Lucan? Spencer, — Martial? Sir John Davies, and others: will you have all in all for profe and verse? take the miracle of our age, Sir Philip Sidney.

The Excellencie of the English tongue by R. C. of Anthony Esquire to W. C. Camden's Remaines concerning Britaine. (Languages.) 1605. [4to.]

EDMUND SPENSER, APRIL—27 DEC., 1594.

ND there, though last not least is

A gentler shepheard may no where be found:

Whose Muse, full of high thoughts invention, Doth like himselfe heroically found.

Colin Clout's Come Home Again. 1595. [4to.]

1594.

N Lavine Land though Livie boft,

There hath beene feene a Conflant dame:

Though Rome lament that she have lost The Gareland of her rarest same,

Yet now we see, that here is found,

As great a Faith in English ground.

Though Collatine have deerely bought,

To high renowne, a lafting life,

And found, that most in vaine have fought,

To have a Faire and Constant wife,

Yet Tarquyne pluckt his glistering grape,

And Shake-speare, paints poore Lucrece rape.

Commendatory verses prefixed to Willobie his Avisa. 1594. [Anon.]

HENRY WILLOBIE, 1594.

CANT. XLIIII.

Henrico Willobego. Italo-Hifpalensis.

W. being fodenly infected with the contagion of a fantastical fit, at the first fight of A, pyneth a while in fecret griefe, at length not able any longer to indure the burning heate of fo fervent a humour, bewrayeth the fecrefy of his difeafe unto his familiar frend W. S. who not long before had tried the curtesy of the like paffion, and was now newly recovered of the like infection; yet finding his frend let bloud in the fame vaine, he took pleafure for a tyme to fee him bleed, & in fleed of flopping the iffue, he inlargeth the wound, with the sharpe rafor of a willing conceit, perfwading him that he thought it a matter very eafy to be compassed, & no doubt with payne, diligence & fome cost in time to be obtayned. this miferable comforter comforting his frend with an impossibilitie, eyther for that he now would fecretly laugh at his frends folly, that had given occasion not long before unto others to laugh at his owne, or because he would fee whether an other could play his part better then himselfe, & in vewing afar off the course of this loving Comedy, he determined to fee whether it would fort to a happier end for this new actor, then it did for the old player. But at length this Comedy was like to have growen to a Tragedy, by the weake & feeble estate that H. W. was brought unto, by a desperate vewe of an impossibility of obtaining his purpose, til Time & Necessity, being his best Phisitions brought him a plaster, if not to heale, yet in part to ease his maladye. In all which discourse is lively represented the unrewly rage of unbrydeled fancy, having the raines to rove at liberty, with the dyvers & fundry changes of affections & temptations, which Will, fet loose from Reason, can devise. &c.

H. W.

H. W.

HAT fodaine chance or change is this,

That doth bewreave my quyet rest?

But yonder comes my faythfull frend,
That like affaultes hath often tryde,
On his advife I will depend,
Where I shall winne, or be denyde, [whether]
And looke what counsell he shall give,
That will I do, where dye or live. [whether]

CANT. XLV.

W. S.

Well met, frend Harry, what's the cause You looke so pale with Lented cheeks? Your wanny face & sharpened nose Shew plaine, your mind some thing mislikes, If you will tell me what it is, Ile helpe to mend what is amisse.

What is she, man, that workes thy woe, And thus thy tickling fancy move?
Thy drousie eyes, & sighes do shoe,
This new disease proceedes of love,
Tell what she is that witch't thee so,
I sweare it shall no farder go.

A heavy burden wearieth one,
Which being parted then in twaine,
Seemes very light, or rather none,
And boren well with little paine:
The fmothered flame, too closely pent,
Burnes more extreame for want of vent.

So forrowes shrynde in secret brest,
Attainte the hart with hotter rage,
Then griefes that are to frendes exprest,
Whose comfort may some part asswage:
If I a frend, whose faith is tryde,
Let this request not be denyde.

Excessive griefes good counsells want,
And cloud the sence from sharp conceits;
No reason rules, where sorrowes plant,
And solly seedes, where sury fretes,
Tell what she is, and you shall see,
What hope and help shall come from mee.

CANT. XLVI.

H. W.

Seeft yonder howfe, where hanges the badge Of Englands Saint, when captaines cry Victorious land, to conquering rage, Loe, there my hopelesse helpe doth ly:

And there that frendly soe doth dwell,
That makes my hart thus rage and swell.

CANT. XLVII.

W. S.

Well, fay no more: I know thy griefe,
And face from whence these starts,
It is not hard to fynd reliefe,
If thou wilt follow good advyse:
She is no Saynt, She is no Nonne,
I thinke in tyme she may be wonne.

veteratoria At first repulse you must not faint, Nor slye the field though she deny You twise or thrise, yet manly bent, Againe you must, and still reply:

When tyme permits you not to talke Then let your pen and singers walke.

Munera (crede mihi) placant hominesq; deosq; (For giftes the wyfest will deceave)

Sometymes with gold, fometymes with ringes,

No tyme nor fit occasion leave, Though coy at first she seeme and wielde, These toyes in tyme will make her yielde.

Looke what she likes; that you must love, And what she hates, you must detest, Where good or bad, you must approve, The wordes and workes that please her best:

If she be godly, you must sweare,
That to offend you stand in feare.

Wicked wiles to decave wittes

Wou must commend her loving face, ceave wittes

Women. For women joy in beauties praise,

You must admire her sober grace,

Her wisdome and her vertuous wayes,

Say, t'was her wit and modest shoe, [show]

That made you like and love her so.

You must be secret, constant, free,
Your silent sighes & trickling teares,
Let her in secret often see,
Then wring her hand, as one that seares
To speake, then wish she were your wise,
And last desire her save your life.

When she doth laugh, you must be glad, And watch occasions, tyme and place, When she doth frowne, you must be sad, Let sighes & sobbes request her grace:

Sweare that your love is truly ment, So she in tyme must needes relent.

Willobie his Avisa, or the true picture of a Modest Maide and of a chaste and constant wife. In hexameter verse. The like argument whereof was never heretofore published. 1594. [4to.] Sig. L 2.

[SIR] W[ILLIAM] HAR[BERT], 1594.

OU that to shew your wits, have taken toyle

In regist'ring the deeds of noble men; And fought for matter in a forraine foyle, As worthie subjects of your silver pen, Whom you have rais'd from darke oblivion's den.

You that have writ of chaste Lucretia, Whose death was witnesse of her spotlesse life: Or pen'd the praise of sad Cornelia, Whose blamelesse name hath made her same so rife,

As noble Pompey's most renoumed wife:

Hither unto your home direct your eies,

Whereas, unthought on, much more matter lies.

Epicedium. A funerall Song, upon the vertuous life and godly death of the right worshipfull the Lady Helen Branch.

Virtus fola manet, catera cuncta ruunt.

[Anon.] 1594.

Reprinted in Brydges' Restituta, vol. iii, pp. 297—299.

MICHAEL DRAYTON, 1594.

UCRECE, of whom proud Rome hath boasted long,
Lately reviv'd to live another age,
And here arriv'd to tell of Tarquin's wrong,
Her chaste denial, and the tyrants rage,
Acting her passions on our stately stage,
She is remember'd, all forgetting me,
Yet I as fair and chaste as ere was she.

Matilda, the faire and chaste Daughter of Lord Robert Fitzwater. 1594.

ROBERT SOUTHWELL, 1594.

HIS makes my mourning Muse refolve in teares,

This theames my heavie penne to plaine in profe;

Christ's thorne is sharpe, no head His garland weares;

Stil finest wits are 'stilling Venus' rose,

In Paynim toyes the fweetest vaines are fpent;

To Christian workes few have their talents lent.

Saint Peters Complaint, with other Poemes. 1595. [410.] The Authour to the Reader. (Grofart's Ed., 1872, pp. xii, xc & 9.)

W[ILLIAM] C[LARKE], 1595.

ET divine Bartaffe eternally praife worthie for his weeks worke, fay the best thinges were made first: Let other countries (fweet Cambridge) envie, (yet admire) my Virgil, thy petrarch, divine Spenfer. And unleffe I erre, (a thing eafie

All praise worthy. Lucrecia Sweet Shakspeare. Eloquent Gaveston. Wanton Adonis. Watsons heyre. So well gra-ced Antho-nie deserveth immortall praise from the hand of that divine Lady who like Corinna contending with Pindarus was oft victorious.

And unlesse I erre, (a thing easie in such simplicitie) deluded by dearlie beloved Delia, and fortunatelie fortunate Cleopatra; Oxford thou maist extoll thy courtedeare-verse happie Daniell, whose sweete refined muse, in contracted shape, were sufficient amongst men, to gaine pardon of the sinne to Rosemond, pittie to distressed Cleopatra, and everliving praise to her loving Delia:

Polimanteia or the meanes lawfull and unlawfull to judge of the fall of a commonwealth, against the frivolous and foolish conjectures of this age, etc. 1595. [410.]

1. C. 1604 circa.

HO'E'R E will go unto the preffe may fee,

The hated Fathers of vilde balladrie, One fings in his base note the River Thames, Shal sound the samous memory of noble king James

Another fayes that he will to his death Sing the renowned worthinesse of sweet Elizabeth,

So runnes their verse in such disordered straine And with them dare great majesty prophane, Some dare do this, some other humbly craves, For helpe of Spirits in their sleeping graves, As he that calde to Shakespeare, Johnson, Greene,

To write of their dead noble Queene
But he that made the Ballads of oh hone,
Did wondrous well to whet the buyer on,
These fellowes are the slaunderers of the time,
Make ryming hatefull through their bastard rime.

But were I made a judge in poetry
They all fhould burne for their vilde herefie.

Epigrames. Served out in 52 severall Dishes for every man to fast without suffering. (From Malone's Copy in the Bodleian Library.)

Modicum non nocet. [n.d. 12mo] Epig. 12.

JOHN WEEVER, 1595.

Ad Gulielmum Shakefpeare.

ONIE-TONG'D Shakefpeare when I faw thine iffue

I fwore Apollo got them and none other,

Their rofie-tainted features cloth'd in [tinted] tiffue,

Some heaven born goddesse said to be their mother:

Rofe-checkt Adonis with his amber [cheeked] treffes,

Faire fire-hot Venus charming him to love her,

Chaste Lucretia virgine-like her dresses,

Prowd lust-stung Tarquine seeking still to prove her:

Romea-Richard; more whose names I [Romeo,] know not,

Their fugred tongues, and power attractive beuty

Say they are Saints, althogh that Sts they flew not

For thousands vowes to them subjective [vow] dutie:

They burn in love thy childre Shakespear het the, [heated]
Go, wo thy Muse more Nymphish brood beget them.

Epigrammes in the oldest cut, and newest fashion. A twife seven houres (in so many weekes) studie No longer (like the fashion) not unlike to continue The first seven, John Weever.

Sit voluisse, sat valuisse.

1599. [12mo.] The 4th week: Epig. 22.

FRANCIS MERES, 1596.

S the Greeke tongue is made famous and eloquent by Homer, Hefiod, Euripedes, Aefchilus, Sophocles, Pindarus, Phocylides and Ariftophanes; and the Latine tongue by Virgill, Ovid, Horace, Silius Italicus, Lucanus, Lucretius, Aufonius and Claudianus: fo the English tongue is mightily enriched, and gorgeouslie invested in rare ornaments and resplendent abiliments by sir Philip Sidney, Spencer, Daniel, Drayton, Warner, Shakespeare, Marlow and Chapman.

As the foule of Euphorbus was thought to live in Pythagoras: fo the fweete wittie foule of Ovid lives in mellifluous & hony-tongued Shakefpeare, witnes his Venus and Adonis, his Lucrece, his fugred Sonnets among his private friends, &c.

As Plautus and Seneca are accounted the best for Comedy and Tragedy among the Latines: so Shakespeare among ye English is the most excellent in both kinds for the stage; for Comedy, witnes his Getleme of Verona, his Errors, his Love labors lost, his Love labours wonne, his Midsummers night dreame, & his Merchant of Venice: for Tragedy his Richard the 2. Richard the 3. Henry the 4.

King John, Titus Andronicus and his Romeo and Juliet.

As Epius Stolo said, that the Muses would speake with Plautus tongue, if they would speak Latin: so I say that the Muses would speak with Shakespeares sine siled phrase, if they would speake English.

As Ovid faith of his worke;

Jamq. opus exegi, quod nec Jovis ira, nec ignis, Nec poterit ferrum, uec edax abolere vetustas.

And as Horace faith of his; Exegi monumentū ære perennius; Regaliq; fitu pyramidū altius; Quod non imber edax; Non Aquilo impotens possit diruere; aut innumerabilis annorum series & fuga temporum: so say I severally of sir Philip Sidneys, Spencers Daniels, Draytons, Shakespeares, and Warners workes;

As Pindarus, Anacreon and Callimachus among the Greekes; and Horace and Catullus among the Latines are the best Lyrick Poets: so in this faculty the best among our Poets are Spencer (who excelleth in all kinds) Daniel, Drayton, Shakespeare, Bretto.

As fo these are our best for Tragedie, the Lorde Buckhurst, Doctor Leg of Cambridge, Doctor Edes of Oxforde, maister Edward Ferris, the Authour of the [1] George] Mirrour for Magistrates, Marlow, Peele, Watfon, Kid, Shakefpeare, Drayton, Chapman, Decker, and Benjamin Johnson.

... fo the best for Comedy amongst us bee. Edward Earle of Oxforde, Doctor Gager of Oxforde, Maister Rowley once a rare Scholler of learned Pembrooke Hall in Cambridge, Maister Edwardes one of her Majesties Chappell, eloquent and wittie John Lilly, Lodge, Gascoyne, Greene, Shakespeare, Thomas Nash, Thomas Heywood, Anthony Mundye our best plotter, Chapman, Porter, Wilson, Hathway, and Henry Chettle.

... fo these are the most passionate among us to bewaile and bemoane the perplexities of Love, Henrie Howard Earle of Surrey, sir Thomas Wyat the elder, sir Francis Brian, sir Philip Sidney, sir Walter Rawley, sir Edward Dyer, Spencer, Daniel, Drayton, Shakespeare, Whetstone, Gascoyne, Samuell Page sometimes sellowe of Corpus Christic Colledge in Oxford, Churchyard, Bretton.

Palladis Tamia. Wits Treasury, Being the Second part of Wits Common wealth. 1598. [12mo.] Fols. 280, 281-2, 282, 283, 284.

R[OBERT] T[OFTE], 1598.

OVES labour lost I once did see, a play

Which I to heare to my fmall joy did flay, Giving attendance to my froward dame:

My mifgiving mind prefaging to me ill, Yet was I drawne to fee it 'gainst my will.

Each actor plaid in cunning wife his part, But chiefly those entrapt in Cupid's snare; Yet all was fained, 'twas not from the hart, They seeme[d] to grieve, but yet they selt no care:

'Twas I that griefe indeed did beare in brest,

The others did but make a shew in jest.

The Months Minde of a melancholy Lover, divided into three parts. By R. T. gentleman. 1598. [12mo.]

RICHARD BARNEFIELD, 1598.

A Remembrance of fome English Poets.

IVE Spenfer ever in thy Fairy Queene; Whose like (for deepe Conceit) was never feene.

Crownd mayst thou bee, unto thy more renowne,

(As King of Poets) with a Lawrell Crowne.

And Daniell, praifed for thy fweet-chast Verse: Whose Fame is grav'd on Rofamonds blacke Herfe.

Still mayst thou live: and still be honored For that rare Worke, The White Rose and the Red.

And Drayton, whose wel-written Tragedies, And fweete Epiftles, foare thy fame to skies. Thy learned Name, is æquall with the rest; Whose stately Numbers are so well addrest.

And Shakespeare thou, whose hony-flowing Vaine.

(Pleasing the World) thy Praises doth obtaine. Whose Venus and whose Lucrece (sweete, and chaste)

Thy Name in fames immortall Booke have plac't.

> Live ever you, at least in Fame live ever: Well may the Bodye dye, but Fame dies never.

> > Poems in Divers humors. Trahit sua quemque voluptas. 1598. [4to.]

JOHN MARSTON, 1598.

HALL, a hall,

Roome for the fpheres, the orbs celeftiall

Will daunce Kemps jigge; they' le revel with neate jumps;

A worthy poet hath put on their pumps.

Luscus, what's plaid to day? Faith now I know

I fet thy lips abroach, from whence doth flowe

Naught but pure Juliet and Romeo.
Say who acts best? Drusus or Roscio?
Now I have him, that nere of ought did speake
But when of playes or players he did treat—
Hath made a commonplace booke out of playes,

And fpeaks in print: at least what ere he faies

Is warranted by curtaine plaudities.

If ere you heard him courting Lesbias eyes, Say (curteous sir), speakes he not movingly, From out some new pathetique tragedy? He writes, he railes, he jests, he courts (what not?)

And all from out his huge long fcraped flock Of well-penn'd Plays.

The Scourge of Villanie. 1599. Satire 11. (Humours.)

JOHN MARSTON, 1598.

MAN, a man, a kingdome for a man,! Why, how now, currifh, man Athenian?

Thou Cynick dog, fee'ft not the streets do fwarme

With troups of men?

The Scourge of Villanie. 1599. Satire 7. (A Cynicke Satyre.)

JOHN MARSTON, 1607.

A he mount[s] Chirall on the wings

A horfe, a horfe, my kingdom for a horse,

Looke the I fpeake play fcrappes.

What You Will. Act ii, Sc. 1. 1607. [4to.]

J. M., 1600.

HO hath a lovinge wife and loves her not,

He is no better than a witleffe fotte; Let fuch have wives to recompense their merite,

Even Menelaus forked face inherite.

Is love in wives good, not in hufbands too ? Why doe men fweare they love then when they wooe?

It feemes tis true that W. S. faid,
When once he heard one courting of a mayde,—

Beleeve not thou mens fayned flatteryes, Lovers will tell a bushell-full of lyes!

The Newe Metamorphosis, or a Feaste of Fancie, or Poeticall Legendes. 1600. [4to.]

1600. Circa.

UT ere I farre did goe

I flunge ye darts of wounding poetrie

These two or three sharpe curses backe. May he

Be by his father in his study tooke,

At Shakespeare's Playes instead of the L^d Cooke.

A Poetical Revenge. From the manuscript collection of Clement Paman.

Printed in Notes and Queries, 2nd S., viii. 285.

JOHN MANNINGHAM, 1601.

Tour feast wee had a play called "Twelue Night, or What you Will," much like the Commedy of Errores, or Menechmi in Plautus, but most like and neere to that in Italian called Inganni. A good practise in it to make the Steward beleeve his Lady widdowe was in love with him, by counterseyting a letter as from his Lady in generall termes, telling him what shee liked best in him, and prescribing his gesture in siniling, his apparaile, &c., and then when he came to practise making him beleeve they tooke him to be mad.

Vpon a tyme when Burbidge played Richard III. there was a citizen grone foe farr in liking with him, that before shee went from the play shee appointed him to come that night unto hir by the name of Richard the Third. Shake-speare overhearing their conclusion went before, was intertained and at his game ere Burbidge came. Then message being brought that Richard the Third was at the dore, Shakespeare caused returne to be made that William the Conqueror was before Richard the Third. Shakespeare's name William. (Mr. Touse?)

Diary of John Manningham, of the Middle Temple, and of Bradbourne, Kent, Barrifter-at-Law, 1602-1603. Edited from the originall manuscript by John Bruce, Esq.

1868. [4to.] p. 18 (Febr. 1601) and p. 39.

BEN JONSON, 1595-6.

O make a child now fwaddled, to proceed

Man, and then shoot up, in one beard and weed,

Past threescore years; or, with three rusty swords,

And help of fome few foot and half-foot words,

Fight over York and Lancaster's long jars, And in the tyring-house bring wounds to scars. The rather prays you will be pleas'd to see One such to-day, as other plays shou'd be; Where neither chorus wasts you o'er the seas, Nor creaking throne comes down the boys to please:

Every Man in his Humour. 1603. [4to.] Prologue.

BEN JONSON, 1600.

ARRY, I will not do as Plautus in his Amphytrio, for all this, fummi Jovis caufâ plaudite; beg a plaudite for God's fake; but if you, out of the bounty of your good-liking, will bestow it, why you may in time make lean Macilente as fat as Sir John Falstaff.

Every Man out of his Humour. Act v, fcene 10. 1600. [4to.]

W. J., 1601.

DARE here speake it, and my speach mayntayne,

That Sir John Falstaffe was not any way

More grosse in body, then you are in brayne. But whether should I (helpe me nowe I pray) For your grosse brayne, you like J. Falstasse graunt,

Or for fmall wit, suppose you John of Gaunt?

The Whipping of the Satyre. 1601. [12mo. Sig. D. 3.]

1602.

NGENIOSO. What's thy judgment of * * William Shakefpeare.

Judicio. Who loves Adonis love, or Lucre's rape,

His fweeter verse containes hart robbing life, Could but a graver subject him content, Without loves soolish lazy languishment.

Kemp. Few of the university pen plaies well, they smell too much of that writer Ovid, and that writer Metamorphosis, and talke too much of Proserpina & Juppiter. Why heres our fellow Shakespeare puts them all downe, I, and Ben Jonson too. O that Ben Jonson is a pestilent fellow, he brought up Horace giving the Poets a pill, but our fellow Shakespeare hath given him a purge that made him beray his credit:

Burbage. Its a shrewd fellow indeed:

Bur. I like your face, and the proportion of your body for Richard the 3. I pray, M. Phil. let me fee you act a little of it.

Philomufus. Now is the winter of our difcontent,

Made glorious fummer by the fonne of Yorke,

The Returne from Pernassus; or the Scourge of Simony, publiquely acted by the Students in St. John's College in Cambridge [in 1606.] Act i, sc. 1; and Act iv, sc. 5. [Anon.] 1606. [4to.]

I. C., 1603.

F Helens rape and Troyes beseiged Towne,

Of Troylus faith, and Creffids falsitie,

Of Rychards stratagems for the english crowne, Of Tarquins lust, and Lucrece chastitie,

Of these, of none of these my muse now treates,

Of greater conquests, warres and loves she speakes.

Saint Mary Magdalens Conversion. 1603. [4to.]

JOHN DAVIES OF HEREFORD, 1603.

* Stage plaiers.

OME followed her by *acting all mens parts, These on a stage she raif'd (in fcorne) to fall;

And made them Mirrors, by their acting Arts,

 Shewing the vices of the time. Wherin men faw their † faults, though ne'r fo fmall:

t W.S.R.B.

Yet fome she guerdond not, to their t defarts;

But, othersome, were but ill-Action all:

Who while they acted ill, ill staid behinde,

(By custome of their maners,) in their minde.

The Civile Warres of Death and Fortune. 1603. [sm. 8vo.]

JOHN DAVIES OF HEREFORD, 1603.

LAYERS, I love yee, and your Qualitie,

As ye are Men, that pass time not abus'd:

c W. S. R. B.

d Simonides faith, that painting is a dumb Poesy, & Poesy
sy a speaking painting.

And come I love for dpainting, poefie,

And fay fell Fortune cannot be excus'd,

That hath for better ufes you refus'd:

Wit, Courage, good shape, good partes, and all good,

As long as al these goods are no roorse us'd,

And though the flage doth flaine pure gentle bloud,

Yet egenerous yee are in minde and moode.

e Roscius was said for his excellency in his quality, to be only worthie to come on the stage, and for his honesty to be more worthy then to come theron.

Microcofmos. The Difcovery of the Little World, with the Government thereof.

MANILIUS.

An mirum est habitare Deum sub pectore nostro? Exemplumq; Dei quisq; est sub imagine parva. 1603. [4to. p. 215. Ff. 3.]

JOHN DAVIES OF HEREFORD, 1610.

To our English Terence, Mr. Will. Shake-speare.

OME fay (good Will) which I, in fport, do fing,

Had'ft thou not plaid fome Kingly parts in fport,

Thou hadft bin a companion for a king; And, beene a King among the meaner fort. Some others raile; but, raile as they thinke fit Thou haft no rayling, but a raigning wit:

And honesty thou fow'ft, which they do reape;

So, to increase their stocke which they do keepe.

The Scourge of Folly, confishing of Satyricall Epigramms and others, &c. 1611. [8vo.]

JOHN DAVIES of Hereford, 1610.

NOTHER, (ah, Lord helpe) mee vilifies

With Art of Love and how to fubtilize

Making lewd Venus, with eternall Lines,
To tye Adonis to her loves defigns:
Fine wit is fhew'n therein: but finer 'twere
If not attired in fuch a bawdy Geare.
But be it as it will: the coyest Dames,
In private reade it for their Closset-games:
For, sooth to say, the lines so draw them on
To the venerian speculation,
That will they, nill they (if of sless thought is free.

A Scourge for Paper-Perfecutors, or Papers Complaint, compiled in truthfull Rimes Against the paper-spoylers of these Times. 1611. [4to.]

SIR WALTER COPE, 1604.

Sir,

them harde to finde, wherfore Leavinge notes for them to feeke me, burbage ys come, & Sayes ther ys no new playe that the quene hath not feene, but they have Revyved an olde one, Cawled Loves Labore loft, which for wytt & mirthe he fayes will pleafe her excedingly. And Thys ys apointed to be playd to Morowe night at my Lord of Sowthamptons, unlefs yow fend a wrytt to Remove the Corpus Cum Caufa to your howfe in strande. Burbage ys my messenger Ready attendyng your pleasure.

Yours most humbly, WALTER COPE.

Letter dated "From your Library," written by Sir Walter Cope, addressed "To the right honorable the Lorde Vycount Cranborne at the Courte."

[Endorsed: 1604, Sir Walter Cope to my Lord.]

Third Report of the Royal Commission of Historical Manuscripts. 1872. p. 148.

ANTHONY SCOLOKER, 1604.

read Arcadia, where the Profe and Verce (Matter and Words) are like his Mistreffes eyes, one still excelling another and without Corivall: or to come home to the vulgars Element, like Friendly Shake speare's Tragedies, where the Commedian rides, when the Tragedian stands on Tip-toe: Faith it should please all, like Prince Hamlet. But in sadnesse, then it were to be feared he would runne mad: Insooth I will not be moone-sicke, to please: nor out of my wits though I displeased all.

Daiphantus or the Passions of Love. 1604. [4to.]

WILLIAM CAMDEN, 1605.

HESE may fuffice for some Poeticall descriptions of our ancient Poets; if I would come to our time, what a world could I present to you out of Sir Philip Sidney, Ed. Spencer, John Owen, Samuel Daniel, Hugh Holland, Ben. Johnson, Thomas Champion, Mich. Drayton, George Chapman, John Marston, William Shakespeare, and other most pregnant wits of these our times, whom succeeding ages may justly admire.

Remaines concerning Britaine. 1605. [4to.] (Poems.)

1606. Circa.

ET thee to London, for, if one man were dead, they will have much need of fuch as thou art: there would be none in my opinion fitter than thyfelf to play his parts. My conceit is fuch of thee, that I durft all the money in my purfe on thy head to play Hamlet with him for a wager. * * When thou feeleft thy purfe well lined, buy thee fome place of lordship in the country, that growing weary of playing, thy money may there bring thee to high dignity and reputation * * for, I have heard indeed of some that have gone to London very meanly, and have come in time to be exceedingly wealthy.

Ratseis Ghost, or the Second Part of his madde Prankes and Robberies. [n.d. 4to.]

GEORGE PEELE, 1607.

How he ferved a Tapster.

EORGE was making merry with three or foure of his friends in Pyecorner; where the Tapster of the house was much given to Poetrie; for he had ingrossed The Knight of the Sunne, Venus and Adonis, and other Pamphlets which the Stripling had collected together;

Merrie Conceited Jests of George Peele: 1607. [1627, p. 27.]

WILLIAM BARKSTEAD, 1607.

UT stay my muse! in thine owne confines keepe,

& wage not warre with fo deere lov'd a neighbor.

But having fung thy day fong rest and sleepe preserve thy small same and his greater favor:

His fong was worthie merrit (Shakfpeare hee) sung the faire bloffome, thou the withered tree

Laurell is due to him, his art and wit hath purchast it, Cyprefs thy brow will fit.

Mirrha, the Mother of Adonis; or Lustes Prodigies. 1607. [4to. Last verse.]

LEWIS MACHIN, 1608.

ELOURS. This is his chamber, let's enter, here's his clerk.

Procedent. Fondling, faid she, since

I have hemm'd thee here,

Within the circuit of this ivory pale.

Drap. I pray you, fir, help us to the speech of your master.

Precedent. I'll be a park, and thou shalt be my deer:

He is very bufy in his study.

Feed where thou wilt, in mountain or in dale; Stay awhile, he will come out anon.

Graze on my lips, and when those mounts are dry,

Stray lower, where the pleafant fountains lie. Go thy way, thou best book in the world!

Velours. I pray you, sir, what book do you read?

Precedent. A book that never an orator's clerk in this kingdom but is beholden unto; it is called Maid's Philosophy, or Venus and Adonis. Look you, gentlemen, I have divers other pretty books.

Drap. You are very well ftor'd, fir; but I hope your master will not stay long.

Precedent. No, he will come prefently.

Enter Mechant.

Velours. Whom have we here? another client fure, crows flock to carcaffes: O'tis the lord Mechant.

Mechant. Save you, gentlemen; fir, is your mafter at any leifure?

Precedent. Here, fit thee down where never ferpent hiffes,

And being fet, I'll fmother thee with kiffes. His businesses yet are many, you must needs attend a while.

The Dumb Knight. 1608. [4to.]

THOMAS HEYWOOD, 1607.

OWDLE R. Why then, have at her! "Fondling, I fay, fince I have hemm'd thee here, Within the circle of this ivory pale, I'll be a park ——"

Moll. Hands off, fond Sir!

Bowdler. ——"and thou shalt be my deer. Feed thou on me, and I will feed on thee; And love shall feed us both."

Moll. Feed you on woodcocks; I can fast awhile.

Bowdler. "Vouchfafe, thou wonder, to alight thy fleed."

Cripple. Take heed, she's not on horseback. Bowdler. Why, then she is alighted.

"Come, fit thee down, where never ferpent hiffes;

And, being fet, I'll fmother thee with kiffes."

The Fair Maid of the Exchange. 1607. [4to.]

THOMAS HEYWOOD, 1612.

ERE likewise, I must necessarily insert a manifest injury done me in that worke, by taking the two Epistles of Paris to Helen, and Helen to Paris, and printing them in a lesse volume, under the name of another, which may put the world in opinion I might steale them from him; and hee, to doe himselfe right, hath since published them in his owne name: but as I must acknowledge my lines not worthy his patronage under whom he hath publisht them, so the author I know much offended with M. Jaggard that (altogether unknowne to him) presumed to make so bold with his name.

Apology for Actors. 1612. Epiflle "to my approved friend, Mr. Nicholas Okes."

THOMAS THORPE, 1609.

TO.THE.ONLIE.BEGETTER.OF.
THESE . INSVING . SONNETS.
Mr. W. H. ALL.HAPPINESSE.
AND . THAT . ETERNITIE.
PROMISED.

BY.

OVR . EVER-LIVING . POET. WISHETH.

THE . WELL-WISHING .
ADVENTVRER . IN .
S E T T I N G.
FORTH.

T. T.

Shakespeare's Sonnets, 1609. [4to.] Dedication.

1609.

A never Writer to an ever Reader. NEWES.

TERNALL reader, you have heere a new play, never stal'd with the Stage, never clapper-clawd with the palmes of the vulgar, and yet paffing full of the palme comicall; for it is a book of your braine, that never undertooke any [his] thing commicall vainely: and were but the vaine names of Commedies changde for the titles of commodities, or of Playes for Pleas, you fhould fee all those grand censors, that now stile them fuch vanities, flock to them for the maine grace of their gravities; especially this author's Commedies, that are fo grain'd[limn'd] to the life, that they ferve for the most common Commentaries of all the actions of our lives, shewing such a dexteritie and power of witte, that the most displeased with Playes are pleafd with his Commedies. And all fuch dull and heavy-witted worldlings, as were never capable of the witte of a Commedie, comming by report of them to his representations, have found that witte there that they never found in themselves, and have parted better-witted than they came; feeling an edge of witte fet upon them, more then ever they dream'd they had braine to grounde it So much and fuch favoured falt of witte is in his Commedies, that they feeme (for their height of pleasure) to be borne in that sea that brought forth Venus. Amongst[Venus & Adonis] all there is none more witty then this: And had I time I would comment upon it, though I know it needs not, (for fo much as will make you thinke your testerne well bestowd) but for fo much worth, as even poore I know to be fluft in it. It deferves fuch a labour, as well as the best Commedie in Terence or Plautus. And beleeve this, that when hee is gone, and his Commedies out of fale, you will fcramble for them, and fet up a new English Inquifition. Take this for a warning, and, at the perrill of your pleafure's loffe, and Judgments, refuse not, nor like this the leffe for not being fullied with the fmoaky breath of the multitude; but thanke fortune for the scape it hath made amongst you. Since by the grand poffeffors wills, I believe, you should have prayd for them rather then been prayd. And fo I leave all fuch to bee prayd for (for the states of their wits healths) that will not praife it.—VALE.

Address prefixed to some copies of Troilus and Cressida. 1609. [First 4to.]

1609.

MAZ'D I stood, to see a crowd
Of civil throats stretched out so loud;
As at a new play all the rooms

Did fwarm with gentles mixt with grooms, So that I truly thought all these Came to see Shore or Pericles.

Pimlyco or Run Red-cap. Tis a mad world at Hogsdon. 1609. [4to.]

HANS JACOB WURMSSER VON VENDENHEYM, APRIL 30, 1610.

E. alla au Globe, lieu ordinaire ou l'on joue les Commedies; y fut representé l'histoire du More de Venise.

Manufcript Journal of His Excellency Louis Frederic; Duke of Wurtemberg-Mumpelgard: Reprefentative of the United German Princes to England, &c., in 1610. (In the British Museum.)

See Staunton's Edition of Shakespeare, 1860: Vol. 1, p. 689, & Rye's England as seen by Foreigners. 1865. pp. cxii, & 61.

JOHN WEBSTER, 1612.

ETRACTION is the fworne friend to ignorance: for mine owne part, I have ever truly cherisht my good opinion of other mens worthy labours, especially of that full and haightned slile of maister Chapman, the labor'd and understanding workes of maister Johnson, the no leffe worthy composures of the both worthily excellent maifter Beamont and maifter Fletcher; and lastly (without wrong last to be named), the right happy and copious industry of m. Shake-speare, m. Decker, and m. Heywood, wishing what I write may be read by their light: protesting that, in the strength of mine owne judgement, I know them fo worthy, that though I rest filent in my own worke, yet to most of theirs I dare (without flattery) fix that of Martial,

-non norunt Hæc monumenta mori.

The White Devil; or Vittoria Corombona. 1612. [4to.] Dedication (last paragraph.)

[JOSEPH FLETCHER], 1613.

E di'd indeed not as an actor dies To die to day, and live again to morrow,

In flew to please the audience, or disguise The idle habit of inforced forrow:

> The croffe His stage was, and He plaid the part

> Of one that for his friend did pawne his heart.

His heart he pawn'd, and yet not for His friend,

For who was friend to Him, or who did love Him?

[for] But to His deadly foe; He did extend His dearest blood to them that did reprove Him,

> For fuch as tooke His life from Him, He gave > Such life, as by His life they could not have.

Christe's Bloodie Sweat, or the Sonne of God in His Agonie. 1613. [4to.] (Dedicated to William Herbert, third Earl of Pembroke.)

Reprinted by the Rev. A. B. Grofart. 1869. p. 177.

BEN JONSON, 1614.

F there be never a fervant-monster in the fair, who can help it, he fays, nor a nest of antiques! he is loth to make nature afraid in his plays, like those that beget tales, tempests, and such like drolleries, to mix his head with other men's heels;

Bartholomew Fair. 1614. [4to.] Induction.

THOMAS FREEMAN, 1614.

To Master William Shakespeare.

HAKESPEARE, that nimble

Mercury thy braine,

Lulls many hundred Argus-eyes afleepe.

So fit, for so thou fashionest thy vaine, At th' horfe-foote fountain thou has drunk full deepe,

Vertues or vice the theame to thee all one is: Who loves chaste life, there's Lucrece for a teacher:

Who lift read luft there's Venus and Adonis, True model of the most lascivious leatcher. Besides in plaies thy wit winds like Meander: When needy new-composers borrow [Whence] more

Thence Terence doth from Plautus or [Then] Menander.

But to praise thee aright I want thy store:

Then let thine owne works thine owne worth upraife

And help t' adorn thee with deferved Baies.

Runne and a Great Cast. 1614. [4to.] Epigram 92.

The Second Bowle.

Horat, Jocum tantavit ès quòd Illecebris erat et grata novitate morandus Lector.

(The second part of Rubbe and a Great Cast. 1614.)

ROBERT TAYLOR, 1614.

ND if it prove so happy as to please, We'll say 'tis fortunate like Pericles.

The Hog hath loft his Pearl. 1614. [4to.] Prologue.

C[HRISTOPHER] B[ROOKE], 1614.

Y tongue in firie dragons' fpleene I fleepe,

That acts, with accents, cruelty may found;

(Part I. St. viii.)

To him that impt my fame with Clio's quill, Whose magick rais'd me from oblivion's den; That writ my storie on the Muses hill, And with my actions dignist'd his pen: He that from Helicon sends many a rill, Whose nectared veines, are drunke by thirstie men;

Crown'd be his stile with fame, his head with bayes;

And none detract, but gratulate his praise.

(Part 2. St. i.)

My working head (my counfell's confistory)
Debates how I might raigne, the princes living:

(Ibid. St. xxvi.)

The devlish fury in my brest entends, In spite of danger and all opposite barrs;

To cut this knot the mistick fates conteyne, And set my life and kingdome on this mayne.

(Part 3. St. xxxviii.)

The Ghost of Richard the Third.

Expressing himselfe in these three Parts.

1. His Character 2. His Legend 3. His Tragedie Containing more of him than hath been heretofore flewed: either in Chronicles, Playes, or Poems. Laurea Defidiæ præbetur nulla. 1614. [4to.]

RICHARD BRATHWAITE, 1615.

F I had liv'd but in King Richard's days,

Who in his heat of passion, midst

Of his Affailants troubled many waies, Crying A horfe, a kingdome for a horfe, O! then my horfe, which now at livery flayes, Had beene fet free, where now he's forc't to fland,

And like to fall into the Oftler's hand.

A Strappado for the Divell. Epigrams and Satyres alluding to the time, with divers measures of no leffe delight. (Upon a Poets Palfrey.) 1615. [8vo.] Quoted by Mr. J. P. Collier in his "Bibliographical and Critical Account," vol. 1, p. 76.

1615.

A Purveiour of Tobacco.

ALL him a Broker of Tobacco, he fcornes the title, hee had rather be tearmed a cogging Merchant. Sir John Falftaffe robb'd with a bottle of Sacke; fo doth hee take mens purses, with a wicked roule of Tobacco at his girdle.

New and choice characters: of feverall authors, with the Wife written by Syr Thomas Overburie. 1615. (Penultimate page.)

APRIL 25, 1616.

Good frend for Iesus sake forbeare,
To digg the dust encloased heare:
Bleste be Y man Y spares thes stones,
And curst be he Y moves my bones.

Inscription on the Tablet over Shakespeare's Grave,

Elucidations

то

THE FIRST PERIOD

OF

SHAKESPEARE'S CENTURIE OF PRAYSE.

ELUCIDATIONS.

--0---

PAGES 1-2.

That Shakespeare was the "upstart crow," and one of the purloiners of Greene's plumes, is put beyond a doubt by the following considerations:

(1) That there was no such a word as Shake-scene (i.e., a tragedian: c.f. Ben Jonson's lines, to heare thy Buskin tread, And shake a Stage:)

(2) That the line in italics is a parody on one which is found in The True Tragedie of Richard Duke of Yorke, 1595, and also in Shakespeare's Henry VI, Part III, act i, sc. 4, viz.:

Oh Tygers hart wrapt in a womans hide.

(3) That Marlowe and Robert Greene were (probably) the joint authors of The two Parts of the Contention and of The True Tragedie, which furnish Parts II & III of Henry VI with their prima stamina, and a considerable number of their lines.

Shakespeare, as the "upstart crow," seems to be one of those alluded to by "R. B. Gent." in Greene's Funeralls, 1594 [4to], where he writes:

Greene gave the ground, to all that went before him Nay, more the men that so eclipst his same Purloynde his plumes; can they deny the same?

The strange terms huddled upon the players by poor Greene are paralleled by what we find in other works of the time: e. g.,

"Out on these puppets, painted images," &c.

The Scourge of Villanie, by Thos. Heywood.
Sat. VII.

"more like Players, Butterflies, Baboons, Apes, Anticks, than men."

Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, 1621 [4to]. (Ed. 1676, p. 295.) P. 3, sec. 2, memb. 3, subs. 3.

As to the extract from The Groat's-worth of Wit, knowing no edition earlier than that of 1596, we have followed the text of that. A copy is in the library of Mr. Henry Huth. The British Museum Library has a copy of the edition of 1617. The two copies in the Bodleian Library are of the editions of 1621 and 1629, the former of which, by a very common error of the press, reads "Tygres head," instead of "Tygers) heart."

or Tygres \

PAGE 4.

It is probable that Chettle had more rhyme than reason in calling Shakespeare Melicert. No allusion could have been intended to the story of Palæmon.

PAGE 5.

A mournfull Dittie, &c. The author unknown. The Green mentioned here is Thomas Green, not the more famous Robert. This ballad is included by Mr. W. Christie-Miller in his List of Black-Letter Ballads and Broadsides, known as the Heber Collection, 1553-1601. It was first published by Mr. J. P. Collier in his Edition of Shakespeare, 1844, vol. i, p. exciv, note.

PAGES 6-7.

It is hardly possible to follow the paper-war waged between Thomas Nashe and Gabriel Harvey without arriving at the conclusion that the latter is here signalling the rise of Shakespeare as poet and dramatist. If this conclusion be correct, Gabriel Harvey was the first writer who recognized the poetic excellence of our great bard: in fact, the only one who betrays the least consciousness of Shakespeare's singular genius. If the lines of John Davies of Hereford, which we have given among our Supplementary Extracts, be held to apply to Shakespeare (and that is Mr. Gerald Massey's view, not ours), the worthy Puritan will be the second writer who discerned Shakespeare's greatness. But, on the other hand, we sometimes find the most extravagant contemporary praise bestowed upon mere poetasters.

PAGE 10.

That Spenser's stanza on Aetion really refers to Shakespeare is established by the fact that no other heroic poet (i. e., historical dramatist, or chronicler in heroic verse) had a surname of heroic sound. Jonson, Fuller, and Bancroft have similar allusions to our bard's warlike name. Mr. J. O. Phillipps (Halliwell) remarks that "the lines [of Spenser] seem to apply with equal propriety to Warner": (Life of Shakespeare: 1848: p. 142.) But Warner is not an heroic but a premonitory name.

Malone's two attempts (Ed. 1821, vol. ii, p. 274) to explain the meaning of Aetion are equally unfortunate. He seems not to have known that $A\epsilon\tau i\omega\nu$ was a Greek proper name, borne, in fact, by the father of Cypselus of Corinth, and by two famous artists. It should be written Aëtion, and pronounced (like Tiresias in Milton) with accents on the first and last syllables. Its root is surely $\dot{a}\epsilon\tau\sigma g$, an eagle; and is, therefore, appropriate to one of "high thoughts" and heroic invention.

PAGES 12-17.

Henry Willobie's W. S. is referred to Shakespeare on two distinct grounds: (1) Because W. S. appears in this "imaginary conversation" as a standard authority on Love; and assuredly Shakespeare was the amatory poet of the day, and, to judge by his Sonnets, "had tried the curtesy of the like passion," and had come unscathed out of the ordeal; Because it is said that this W. S. "in vewing the course of this loving Comedy determined to see whether it would sort to a happier end for this new actor, then it did for the old player," with other theatrical imagery specially applicable to a player and dramatist. Assuredly, no other contemporary poet of the same initials, whether lyrist or dramatist (and five or six might be named), had any claim to this distinction.

PAGE 18.

This Epicedium is of unknown authorship. The lines—

"You that have writ of chaste Lucretia, Whose death was witness of her spotlesse life:"

seem to refer to Shakespeare's poem. The line-

"Hither unto your home direct your eies"

recals two lines in Lycidas; where, by the way, Milton implicitly compares Lycidas with Melicert (Palæmon), invoking the dolphins to waft his body into port.

f

In Brydges' Restituta this poem is subscribed W. Har. We have adopted a conjecture of Mr. W. B. Rye, that these letters stand for Sir William Harbert.

PAGE 19.

This passage from Drayton's Matilda is only in the first edition, that of 1594. Shakespeare's Rape of Lucrece was published in that year. Heywood's drama, so named, did not appear till 1608. The second line seems to imply a dramatic representation: and, in confirmation of this view, we find almost the same words in Drayton's Mistress Shore to Ed. V:

Or passionate Tragedian, in his rage Acting a Love-sick Passion on the Stage.

PAGE 20.

On the Grenville copy of Polimanteia, 1592, Sig. R. 2, is a pencil note, in the well-known handwriting of Mr. J. P. Collier, which runs thus: "Q if the notice of Shakespeare in this book be not the oldest known." This query must have been long ago answered in the negative by the querist himself. Mr. C. Elliot Browne, in a note on the side-note (Notes and Queries, 4th S. xi. 378), falls into the same error. Shakespeare's name occurs in a work printed in 1594. The construction of the side-note is not (as Mr. Halliwell read it in his Life of Shakespeare: 1848: p. 159) that "all praise worthy Lucretia [of] sweet Shakespeare," but that "All-praiseworthy [is the] Lucretia [of] sweet Shakespeare." In fact the epithet is used just above of Du Bartas; and Spenser applies it to nine of his heroines in Colin Clout's come home again. Mr. C. E. Browne would also identify "Watson's heyre" with "Sweet Shakespeare," and give him "Wanton Adonis," as well as "Lucretia." Others contend that the "heyre" was Henry Constable. Probably, it was on the strength of this side-note that the late Rev. N. J. Halpin arrived at the rather hazardous conclusion that Shakespeare was a member of "one (or perhaps more) of the English Universities." See his Dramatic Unities of Shakespeare, 1849, p. 12, note.

PAGE 22.

The Editor is indebted to Mr. J. O. Phillipps for this curious epigram, which was overlooked by Malone's continuator; and had it been received in time, it would have immediately followed A Mourneful Dittie (ante p. 5) to which it refers. Malone saw in this epigram an allusion to Englandes Mourning Garment. Though the last, strictly speaking, was "Anon." (ante p. 4), yet the name of "Hen: Chetle" concludes the postscript to The Order and Proceeding of the Funerall, printed with and after Englandes Mourning Garment.

PAGE 25-27.

Of these extracts from Mere's Palladis Tamia, the second has been repeated ad nauseam, while the other five have been usually ignored. One matter of interest in the second extract is the mention of a play by Shakespeare under the name of Love Labours Wonne. this be a superseded or an alternative name for one of those included in our "canon," it is important to identify it, as affording some addition to the scanty evidences on which we have to determine the chronological order of the plays. Farmer identified Love Labours Wonne with All's well that ends well; and his dictum has been acquiesced in by all the critics save two. The Rev. Joseph Hunter gave the preference to The Tempest, which, for his purpose had to be ante-dated some ten or a dozen years; and Mr. A. E. Brae, in his Collier, Coleridge and Shakespeare, advocates the claims of Much ado about Nothing. But as that play was entered on the Stationers' Books on August 23, 1600, Meres could hardly have referred to it. The language of the first extract from Meres recals two lines in that magnificent eulogy of Poetry, which we believe to be one of Shakespeare's contributions to Ben Jonson's plays. (See our Supplementary Extracts.)

But view her in her glorious ornaments, Attired in the majestie of arte, &c.

PAGE 30.

The first extract from the eleventh Satire of The Scourge of Villanie is a parody on two lines in Romeo and Juliet.

Capulet. A hall! a hall! give room and foot it girls.

More light ye knaves.

"Kemp's jigge" was one of those diversions, of combined singing and dancing, which were invented and performed by him. (See Dyce's Introduction to Kemp's Nine days wonder, p. xx, and Collier's Memoirs of Actors, pp. 100—102.) The "worthy poet" was Sir John Davies, the author of Orchestra or a Poeme on Dauncing, 1596.

PAGE 31.

The first line in the seventh satire of The Scourge of Villanie is a parody on the well-known line in Shakespeare's King Richard III, literally quoted by Marston in his What you Will. (See p. 32, l. 3, and p. 66, l. 5.) Marston also parodies the same line in his Parasitaster, 1606:

A foole, a foole, my coxcombe for a foole! where, too, we find another line taken almost literally from Richard III, act.i, sc. I:

Plots ha' you laid, inductions dangerous.

PAGE 30.

In the eleventh satire of The Scourge of Villanie, "Drusus" is Shakespeare, and "Roscio" is the sobriquet of Burbage. This fact convinces Mr.

Gerald Massey that John Davies' epigram entitled Drusus his deere Deere-hunting (No. 50 in The Scourge of Folly) was meant to allude to Shake-speare's escapade at Charlecote or Fulbroke. To help his case, however, Mr. Massey has to omit the epigram and to alter its title. (The Secret Drama of Shakespeare's Sonnets unfolded, 1872: Supplemental Chapter, p. 40.)

Shakespeare was called Drusus (by Marston) probably on account of his handsome presence and courtly manners, after Nero Claudius Drusus, a younger brother of the Emperor Tiberius. This virtuous prince is described as "free from reserve;" and it is said that "the noble courtesy of his manners was set off by singular beauty of person and dignity of form. He possessed in a high degree the winning quality of always exhibiting towards his friends an even and consistent demeanour, without capricious alternations of familiarity and distance." (See Dr. William Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biography, s. n., where we are referred to Tac. Ann. vi, 51; & Vell. Pat. iv, 97.)

PAGE 33.

This W. S. must stand for a name which gives two trochees (like Wīlliam Shākespeare), and is, probably, identical with the W. S. in Willobic his Avisa, p. 14. It is not wonderful that the concluding couplet is not found in Shakespeare's works, seeing that it is quoted as a conversational impromptu.

PAGE 35.

Mr. J. P. Collier identifies this Italian play with Glinganni Comedia del Signor N. S., &c., 1582. See his Further Particulars, 1839, p. 11.

As to the second extract from Manningham's Diary, if the lady-citizen had such good taste as to entertain Shakespeare in lieu of Burbage, honi soit qui mal y pense; for what she is represented as doing was in accordance with the customs of the day. We read in Micro-cosmographie, 1628, p. 21 (A Player):

"The waiting women Spectators are over-eares in love with him, and Ladies fend for him to act in their Chambers."

The "game" referred to by Manningham need have been nothing worse than a play-scene. The story is given on the authority of "Mr. Curle," i. e., the Mr. E. Curle whom Manningham so often cites. But the name has been tampered with, to make it appear Toole (or Tooly, the actor). A dark line has been drawn over the top of the C, to suggest a T; and similar touches are seen in the two succeeding letters. Accordingly Mr. J. P. Collier (Annals of the Stage, &c., I, 332, note) gives the name as Tooly. Mr. John Bruce reading the name so touched up, gives it as Toule, a name which does occasionally occur in the Diary. He again mistakes the name on the next page.

The same story, in a somewhat different shape, is quoted by Mr. Halliwell from the Saunders Manuscript. (Life of Shakespeare, 1848, p. 196-7, note.)

PAGE 36.

In the passage from Every Man in his Humour the allusions are to Shakespeare's Henry V and Henry VI.

PAGE 37.

In that from Every Man out of his Humour the allusion is to Shakespeare's Henry IV.

PAGE 38.

Mr. J. P. Collier (New Particulars, &c., 1836, p. 68) remarks on this allusion, "'Small wit' means here weak understanding, which certainly is not a characteristic of Shakespeare's John of Gaunt." But W. J. does not make "small wit" a characteristic of John of Gaunt, any more than he makes "gross brain" a characteristic of Sir John Falstaffe. All he does is, with a humorous pun on gross, to suppose a fanciful proportion between the body and the mind.

PAGE 39-40.

Judicio's censure on Shakespeare's Poems is reiterated by John Davies of Hereford: see pp. 39 & 44; and justified by Peele, Machin, Heywood, and Freeman: see pp. 49, 51-53 and 63.

If we except such anthologies as England's Parnassus, England's Helicon, and Belvédere, all issued in 1600, we may venture on the assertion that these two lines from Richard III constitute the earliest known quotation from Shakespeare. Marston, Machin, and Heywood are all a few years later. (See pp. 38 and 54-6.)

The passage, "O that Ben Jonson is a pestilent fellow; he brought up Horace, giving the poets a pill;" alludes to Jonson's Poetaster, act v, sc. 1 (1601). (See our Supplementary Extracts.) The subsequent remark, "but our fellow Shakespeare hath given him a purge, that made him beray his credit," is mysterious. Where did our bard put Jonson to his purgation? Assuredly neither Stephano nor Malvolio could have been a caricature of Jonson, who was neither a sot nor a gull.

Two editions of The Returne from Parnassus were published in 1606. We have followed the text of the second: the first omits the word "lazy."

PAGES 41 & 42.

Just as Drusus and Roscio are associated by Marston, so here we find W. S. and R. B. in company; and the text of both passages is sufficiently explicit to show whom Davies had in mind. Possibly, too, in the former he had been thinking of Hamlet's description of the player's vocation.

PAGE 43.

The commencing lines may refer to a fact related in a letter from Chamberlaine to Winwood, dated December 18, 1604.

"The Tragedy of Govery, with all the Action and Actors hath been twice represented by the King's Players, with exceeding Concourse of all sorts of People. But whether the matter or manner be not well handled, or that it be thought unsit that Princes should be played on the Stage in their Life-time, I hear that some great Councillors are much displeased with it, and so 'tis thought shall be forbidden." (Winwood's Memorials, 1725, ii, 41.)

PAGE 44.

The first line here quoted is thus given by Drake in his Shakespeare and his Times, vol. ii, p. 30:

Another (ah, harde happe) me vilifies With art of love, &c.

PAGE 48.

In the Second Part of Ratsey's Ghost, too, we find Burbage and Shakespeare associated, as they were by Marston and by Davies: "if one man were dead" identifies the former; while, "some that have gone to London," &c., unmistakeably points to the latter. The First Part of Ratsey's Ghost is not extant.

PAGES 51-53.

Heywood is quoting stanzas 39th and 3rd of Venus and Adonis; but the lines—

Feed thou on me, and I will feed on thee, And love shall feed us both, are not Shakespeare's, but Heywood's parody; and "Come, sit thee down," is an error for "Here come and sit." Machin also is quoting stanzas 39th and 3rd; and he also misquotes from both: "on dale" should have been "in dale," "when those mounts are" should have been "if those hills be," and "Here sit thee down," is inaccurate. That Shakespeare may have disseminated a first draft of his poem, differing from that known to us, is, perhaps, countenanced by the variæ lectiones in the old copies of Shakespeare's Poems: especially considering that we know one stanza of the Rape of Lucrece (quoted in the Second Period, p. 154) which is not only different, but in a different measure from ours.

PAGE 54.

Heywood here refers to W. Jaggard's second edition, called the third, (1612), of the Passionate Pilgrim.

PAGE 55.

The entry of this edition of the Sonnets in the Stationers' Registers runs thus:

2nd May, 1609, Tho. Thorpe. A booke called Shakefpeare's Sonnets.

PAGE 58.

The play referred to under the name of "Shore" may be one by Henry Chettle and John Day, circa 1598, entitled Jane Shore. It is mentioned by Henslowe in his Diary (1603), Shakespeare Society's Edition, p. 251; by Beaumont and Fletcher, in The Knight of the Burning Pestle (1613):

"I was nere at one of these Playes as they say, before; but I should have seen Jane Shore once," and by Christopher Brooke in The Ghost of Richard the Third (His Legend);

"But now her fame by a vild play doth grow;" the play is not extant.

PAGE 59.

It is not improhable that "cosen garmombles" in the first quarto (1602) of the Merry Wives of Windsor (called "Cozen-Jermans" in other editions) is a direct reference to Count Mompelgard (in French Montbéliard), Duke of Wurtemberg, whose visit to the Globe Theatre is recorded by his secretary. In fact, Gar-momble is Mombel-gar by metathesis; and his designation of the Duke as "cosen" is an evident allusion to Queen Elizabeth's letters to him. In the play the plural "cosen garmombles" seems to be a generic term for the suite of the Duke. the editor's opinion, Mr. W. B. Rye has perfectly identified the allusions in the Introduction of his capital work, England as Seen by Foreigners, 1865, p, lv; and a more interesting bit of Shakespearian illustration has never been recovered than the first visit of the Duke to London, Windsor, Maidenhead and Reading, in 1592.

PAGE 61.

This is perhaps the most curious allusion to a work of Shakespeare's made during his lifetime:

"the part Of one that for his friend did pawn his heart" was assuredly the part of Antonio, in the Merchant of Venice.

PAGE 62.

In the extract from the Induction to Bartholomew Fair, the mention of "a servant monster" recals Caliban in Shakespeare's Tempest; and the expression "to mix his head with other men's heels" recals a scene in that play where Trinculo takes refuge from the storm under Caliban's gabardine. There can be no doubt, then, that Jonson was alluding to the Tempest.

PAGE 65-66.

Besides the direct allusion to the play of Richard III, in Christopher Brooke's poem, there are several lines caught from Shakespeare's work. The three most striking are here given. The first refers to these lines in act v, sc. 3:

Our ancient word of courage, fair St. George Inspire us with the spleen of fiery dragons!

The second refers to a line in act ii, sc. 2:

My other felf, my counfel's confiftory.

The third refers to these lines in act v, sc. 4:

Slave, I have fet my life upon a caft, And I will stand the hazard of the die.

PAGE 67.

This curious passage is taken from the Edition of 1615, a copy of which has been recently acquired by the British Museum. The "characters" were then first added to Sir Thomas Overburie's Wife. It is not in the 7th edition, the first of the five which were published in 1616: but it is in the Bodleian copy of that date. From 1616 to 1665 nine editions were published; a copy of each is in the British Museum; but the "Purveiour of Tobacco" does not occur in any of them.

PAGE 68.

The inscription on Shakespeare's grave-stone is feebly parodied in the Apology prefixed to Graves' Spiritual Quixote: (Ed. 1783. Vol. i, p. xi.)

CORRECTIONS.

P. S, l. 8, for "Steeven's" read Steevens'.

P. 35, 1. 28, for "Touse?" read Curle.

P. 36, l. 17, for "1603" read 1601. P. 38, l. 10, for "suppose" read suppose.

57

SHAKESPEARE'S CENTURIE OF PRAYSE.

SECOND PERIOD.

1617 — 1642.

1617-1622.

IVDICIO PYLIVM, GENIO SOCRATEM, ARTE MARONEM,

TERRA TEGIT, POPVLVS MÆRET, OLYMPVS HABET.

STAY PASSENGER, WHY GOEST THOU BY SO FAST?

READ IF THOV CANST, WHOM ENVIOUS DEATH HATH PLAST,

WITH IN THIS MONVMENT SHAKSPEARE WITH WHOME

QVICK NATURE DIDE: WHOSE NAME DOTH DECK Y TOMBE

FAR MORE THEN COST: SIEH ALL, Y HE [SITH] HATH WRITT, LEAVES LIVING ART, BVT PAGE, TO SERVE HIS WITT.

OBIIT ANO DO' 1616

ÆTATIS, 53. DIE 23 AP.

Infcriptions upon the Tablet under Shakespeare's Bush, in the Chancel-north-wall of Stratford Church.

BEN JONSON, 1618.

E faid Shakespear wanted Art, and sometimes Sense; for, in one of his plays, he brought in a number of men, saying they had suffered Ship-wrack in Bohemia, where is no sea near by a 100 miles.

Heads of a Conversation, etc. Sir Wm. Drummond's Works: (Printed Selections). 1711. [Fo.]

His censure of the English Poets was this.

* * * * *
That Shakfpeer wanted arte.

Certain informations and maners of Ben. Johnson's to W. Drummond. § III. Shakespeare Society's Edition, 1842.

EU. H[OOD], 1620.

On ye death of ye famous Actor R. Burbadge.

EE'S gon and with him what a world are dead.

Oft have I feene him leape into a grave

Suiting ye person (wch hee us'd to have) Of a mad lover, wth so true an eye,

That there I would have fworne hee meant to dye.

Oft have I feene him play this part in jest So lively, yt spectators, and the rest

Of his crewes, whilft hee did but feeme to bleed,

Amazed, thought hee had bene deade indeed.

Gentleman's Magazine: June, 1825. Vol. 95. Part 1, p. 498.

WILLIAM BASSE, 1622. circa.

On Mr. William Shakefpeare.

ENOWNED Spencer lie a thought more nigh

To learned Beaumont, and rare Beaumont ly

A little nearer Chaucer, to make rome For Shakespeare in your threfold, fourfold tombe.

To lodge all fouer in one bed make a shifte Until Domes day, for hardly will [a] fifte Betwixt this day and that by fate bee slaine, For whom the curtains shal bee drawne againe.

But if Precedencie in death doe barre
A fourth place in your facred Sepulcher,
In this uncarved marble of thy owne,
Sleepe, brave Tragedian, Shakespeare, sleepe alone;

Thy unmolested rest, unshared cave,
Possesse as lord, not tenant, to thy grave,
That unto others it may counted bee
Honour hereafter to bee layed by thee.

Manuscript Collection of Miscellaneous Poems, temp. Charles I: printed in Fennell's Shakespeare Repository. p. 10. Donne's Poems. 1633. [4to, omitting ll. 13 and 14, and with many variations.] (Appended, with many alterations, to Shake-Speare's Poems. 1640.)

JOHN HEMINGE, HENRY CONDELL, 1623.

Right Honourable.

HILST we studie to be thankful in our particular, for the many favors we have received from your L. L. we are falne upon the ill fortune, to mingle two the most diverse things that can bee, feare, and rashnesse; rashnesse in the enterprize, and feare of the fuccesse. For, when we valew the places your H. H. fustaine, we cannot but know their dignity greater, then to defcend to the reading of these trifles: and, while we name them trifles, we have depriv'd our felves of the defence of our Dedication. But fince your L. L. have beene pleas'd to thinke these trifles some-thing, heertofore; and have profequated both them, and their Authour living, with fo much favour: we hope, that (they out-living him, and he not having the fate, common with fome, to be exequutor to his owne writings) you will use the like indulgence toward them, you have done unto their parent. There is a great difference, whether any Booke choose his

Patrones, or finde them: This hath done both. For, fo much were your L. L. likings of the feverall parts, when they were acted, as before they were published, the Volume ask'd to be yours. We have collected them. and done an office to the dead, to procure his Orphanes, Guardians; without ambition either of felfe-profit, or fame: onely to keepe the memory of fo worthy a Friend, & Fellow alive, as was our Shakespeare, by humble offer of his playes, to your most noble patron-Wherein, as we have justly observed, no man to come neere your L. L. but with a kind of religious addresse; it hath bin the height of our care, who are the Prefenters, to make the prefent worthy of your H. H. by the perfection. But, there we must also crave our abilities to be confiderd, my Lords. We cannot go beyond our owne powers. Country hands reach foorth milke, creame, fruites, or what they have: and many Nations (we have heard) that had not gummes & incenfe, obtained their requests with a leavened Cake. It was no fault to approch their Gods, by what meanes they could: And the most, though meanest, of things are made more precious, when they are dedicated to In that name therefore, we most humbly confecrate to your H. H. these remaines of your fervant Shakespeare; that what delight is in them, may be ever your L. L. the reputation his, & the faults ours, if any be committed, by a payre fo carefull to fhew their gratitude both to the living, and the dead, as is

Your Lordshippes most bounden,

The Epifle Dedicatorie to William, Earle of Pembroke & Philip, Earle of Montgomery. (Prefixed to the First Folio Edition of Shakespeare's Works.)

JOHN HEMINGE, HENRIE CONDELL, 1623

To the great Variety of Readers.

ROM the most able, to him that can but fpell: There you are number'd. We had rather you were weighd. Especially, when the fate of all Bookes depends upon your capacities: and not of your heads alone, but of your purfes. Well! it is now publique, & you wil fland for your priviledges wee know: to read, and cenfure. Do fo, but buy it first. That doth best commend a Booke, the Stationer faies. Then, how odde foever your braines be, or your wifedomes, make your licence the fame, and fpare not. Judge your fixe-pen'orth, your shillings worth, your five shillings worth at a time, or higher, fo you rife to the just rates, and welcome. But, what ever you do, Buy. Cenfure will not drive a Trade, or make the Jacke go. And though you be a Magistrate of wit, and fit on the Stage at Black-Friers, or the Cock-pit, to arraigne Playes dailie, know, these Playes have had their triall alreadie, and flood out all Appeales; and do now come forth quitted rather by a Decree of Court, then any purchas'd Letters of commendation.

It had bene a thing, we confesse, worthie to have bene wished, that the Author himselfe had liv'd to have fet forth, and overfeen his owne writings; But fince it hath bin ordain'd otherwife, and he by death departed from that right, we pray you do not envie his Friends, the office of their care, and paine, to have collected & publish'd them; and so to have publish'd them, as where (before) you were abus'd with diverse stolne, and surreptitious copies, maimed, and deformed by the frauds and stealthes of injurious impostors, that expos'd them: even those, are now offer'd to your view cur'd, and perfect of their limbes; and all the rest, absolute in their numbers, as he conceived the. Who, as he was a happie imitator of Nature, was a most gentle expresser of it. His mind and hand went together: And what he thought, he uttered with that eafinesse, that wee have scarse received from him a blot in his papers. it is not our province, who onely gather his works, and give them you, to praise him. is yours that reade him. And there we hope, to your divers capacities, you will finde enough, both to draw, and hold you: for his wit can no more lie hid, then it could be loft. Reade him, therefore; and againe, and againe: And if then you doe not like him, furely you are in some manifest danger, not to understand him. And so we leave you to other of his Friends, whom if you [who] need, can bee your guides: if you neede them not, you can leade your selves, and others. And such Readers we wish him.

Address prefixed to the First Folio Edition of Shakespeare's Works.

B[EN] J[ONSON], 1623.

To the Reader.

HIS Figure, that thou here feest put,
It was for gentle Shakespeare cut;
Wherein the Graver had a strife with Nature, to out-doo the life:
O, could he but have drawne his wit
As well in brasse, as he hath hit
His face; the Print would then surpasse
All, that was ever writ in brasse.
But, since he cannot, Reader, looke
Not on his Picture, but his Booke.

Facing Droeshout's portrait of Shakespeare prefixed to the First Folio Edition of his Works.

BEN JONSON, 1623.

To the memory of my beloved, the Author Mr. William Shakespeare: and what he hath left us.

O draw no envy (Shakespeare) on thy name,

Am I thus ample to thy Booke, and Fame:

While I confesse thy writings to be such, As neither Man, nor Muse, can praise too much.

'Tis true, and all mens fuffrage. But these wayes

Were not the paths I meant unto thy praise:

For feeliest Ignorance on these may light,

Which, when it founds at best, but eccho's right;

- Or blinde Affection, which doth ne're advance The truth, but gropes, and urgeth all by chance;
- Or crafty Malice, might pretend this praife, And thinke to ruine, where it feem'd to raife.
- These are, as some infamous Baud, or Whore, Should praise a Matron. What could hurt her more?
- But thou art proofe against them, and, indeed Above th' ill fortune of them, or the need.

@@@@@@

I, therefore will begin. Soule of the Age!

The applause! delight! the wonder of our Stage!

My Shakefpeare, rife; I will not lodge thee by Chaucer, or Spenfer, or bid Beaumont lye

A little further, to make thee a roome:

Thou art a Moniment, without a tombe,

And art alive still, while thy Booke doth live, And we have wits to read, and praise to give.

That I not mixe thee fo, my braine excuses;

I meane with great, but difproportion'd Mufes:

For, if I thought my judgement were of yeeres, I should commit thee furely with thy peeres, And tell, how farre thou didst our Lily outfhine,

Or fporting Kid, or Marlowes mighty line.

And though thou hadft fmall Latine, and leffe Greeke,

From thence to honour thee, I would not feeke For names; but call forth thund'ring Æfchilus, Euripides, and Sophocles to us,

Paccuvius, Accius, him of Cordova dead,

To life againe, to heare thy Buskin tread,

And shake a Stage: Or, when thy Sockes were on,

Leave thee alone, for the comparison Of all, that infolent Greece, or haughtie Rome fent forth, or fince did from their ashes come.

@@@@@@

Triumph, my Britaine, thou hast one to showe,

To whom all Scenes of Europe homage owe. He was not of an age, but for all time!

And all the Muses still were in their prime,

When like Apollo he came forth to warme Our eares, or like a Mercury to charme!

Nature her felfe was proud of his defignes,

And joy'd to weare the dreffing of his lines!

Which were fo richly fpun, and woven fo fit, As, fince, she will vouchfafe no other Wit.

The merry Greeke, tart Aristophanes,

Neat Terence, witty Plautus, now not please; But antiquated and deserted lye

As they were not of Natures family.

Yet must I not give Nature all: Thy Art, My gentle Shakespeare, must enjoy a part.

For though the Poets matter, Nature be, His Art doth give the fashion. And, that he,

Who casts to write a living line, must sweat, (such as thine are) and strike the second heat

Upon the Mufes anvile: turne the fame, (And himfelfe with it) that he thinkes to frame;

Or for the lawrell, he may gaine a fcorne, For a good Poet's made, as well as borne.

And fuch wert thou. Looke how the fathers face

Lives in his iffue, even fo, the race
Of Shakefpeares minde and manners brightly thines

In his well torned, and true-filed lines:

In each of which, he feemes to fhake a Lance, As brandish't at the eyes of Ignorance.

Sweet Swan of Avon! what a fight it were To fee thee in our waters yet appeare,

And make those flights upon the bankes of Thames,

That fo did take Eliza, and our James!

But stay, I see thee in the Hemisphere

Advanc'd, and made a Constellation there! Shine forth, thou Starre of Poets, and with rage Or influence, chide or cheere the drooping Stage;

Which, fince thy flight fro hence, hath mourn'd like night,

And despaires day, but for thy Volumes light.

Prefixed to the First Folio Edition of Shakespeare's Works.

BEN JONSON, 1625.

ROLOGUE. We ask no favour from you; only we would entreat of madam Expectation—— Expect. What, mafter Prologue?

Pro. That your ladyship would expect no more than you understand.

Expect. Sir, I can expect enough.

Pro. I fear, too much, lady; and teach others to do the like.

Expect. I can do that too, if I have cause.

Pro. Cry you mercy, you never did wrong, but with just cause.

The Staple of News. 1625. [4to.] Induction.

BEN JONSON, 1625 circa.

De Shakespeare nostrat

REMEMBER, the Players have often mentioned it as an honour to Shakefpeare, that in his writing, (whatfoever he penn'd) hee never blotted out line. My answer hath beene, would [one] he had blotted a thousand. Which they thought a malevolent fpeech. I had not told posterity this, but for their ignorance, who choose that circumstance to commend their friend by, wherein he most faulted. And to justifie mine owne candor, (for I lov'd the man, and doe honour his memory (on this fide Idolatory) as much as any.) Hee was (indeed) honest, and of an open, and free nature: had an excellent Phantsie; brave notions, and gentle expressions: wherein hee flow'd with that facility, that fometime it was necessary he should be stop'd: Sufflaminandus erat; as Augustus said of Haterius. His wit was in his owne power; would the rule of it had beene fo too. Many times hee fell into those things, could not escape laughter: As when hee faid in the person of Cafar, one speaking to him; Cafar thou dost me Hee replyed: Cæfar did never wrong, but with just cause: and such like; which were ridiculous. But hee redeemed his vices, with his vertues. There was ever more in him to be prayfed, then to be pardoned.

Timber; or, Discoveries; made upon men and matter: as they have flow'd out of his daily readings; or had their refluxe to his peculiar Notion of the Time. Works: 1640-1. [Fo.] vol. ii, pp. 97-98.

HUGH HOLLAND, 1623.

Upon the Lines and Life of the Famous Scenicke Poet,

Master William Shakespeare.

HOSE hands, which you fo clapt, go now, and wring

You Britaines brave; for done are Shakespeares dayes:

His dayes are done, that made the dainty Playes,

Which make the Globe of heav'n and earth to ring.

Dry'de is that veine, dry'd is the Thefpian Spring,

Turn'd all to teares, and $Ph\alpha bus$ clouds his rayes:

That corp's, that coffin now besticke those bayes,

Which crown'd him Poet first, then Poets King.

If Tragedies might any Prologue have,

All those he made, would scarse make one to this:

Where Fame, now that he gone is to the grave (Deaths publique tyring-house) the Nuncius is. For though his line of life went soone about, The life yet of his lines shall never out.

Prefixed to the First Folio Edition of Shakespeare's Works.

I. M., 1623.

To the memorie of M. W. Shake-speare.

EE wondred (Shake-speare) that thou went'st so soone

From the Worlds-Stage, to the Graves-Tyring-roome.

Wee thought thee dead, but this thy printed worth,

Tels thy Spectators, that thou went'st but forth

To enter with applause. An Actors Art, Can dye, and live, to acte a second part. That's but an Exit of Mortalitie; This, a Re-entrance to a Plaudite.

Prefixed to the First Folio Edition of Shakespeare's Works.

ROBERT BURTON, 1624.

HEN Venus ran out to meet her rofe-cheeked Adonis, as an elegant *Poet of ours fet her out, *Shakespeare.

----the bushes in the way
Some catch her necke, some kiffe her face,
Some twine about her legs to make her stay,
And all did covet her for to embrace.

Part 3. Sec. 2. Memb. 2. Subs. 2.

And many times those which at the first fight cannot fancy or affect each other, but are harsh and ready to disagree, offended with each others carriage, [like Benedict and Betteris in the *Comedie], and in whom they * Shakespeare. find many faults, by this living together in a house, conference, kissing, colling, and such like allurements, begin at last to dote insensibly one upon another.

Part. 3. Sec. 2. Memb. 3. Subs. 4.
The words in [] appear for the first time in the 3rd Edition, 1628. [Fo.]

Who ever heard a flory of more woe, Than that of Juliet and her Romeo?

Part 3. Sec. 2. Memb. 5. Subs. 1.
The Anatomy of Melancholy. 2nd Edition.
1624. [Fo.]

(Other causes of Love-Melancholy, &c.; Artificial Allurements; & Prognosticks of Love-Melancholy; pp. 371, 427, & 380. Edition 1676. [Fo.] pp. 284, 298, & 332.)

RICHARD JAMES, 1625. circa.

YOUNG gentle ladie of your acquaintance, having read the works of Shakespeare, made me this question:

How Sir Jhon Falstaffe, or Fastolf, as it is written in the statute book of Maudlin Colledge in Oxford, where everye dave that focietie were bound to make memorie of his foule, could be dead in Harrie the Fifts time and againe live in the time of Harrie the Sixt to be banisht for cowardize? Whereto I made answeare that this was one of those humours and mistakes for which Plato banisht all poets out of his commonwealth; that Sir Jhon Falstaffe was in those times a noble valiant fouldier, as apeeres by a book in the Heralds Office dedicated unto him by a herald whoe had binne with him, if I well remember, for the space of 25 yeeres in the French wars; that he feemes allfo to have binne a man of learning, because, in a librarie at Oxford, I finde a book of dedicating churches fent from him for a prefent unto Bisshop Wainflete, and inscribed with his owne hand. That in Shakespeare's first shewe of Harrie the Fift, the person with which he undertook to playe a buffone was not Falstaffe, but Sir Jhon Oldcastle, and that offence beinge worthily taken by perfonages descended from his title, as peradventure by manie others allso whoe ought to have him in honourable memorie, the poet was putt to make an ignorant shifte of abusing Sir Jhon Falstophe, a man not inferior of vertue, though not so famous in pietie as the other, whoe gave witnesse unto the truth of our reformation with a constant and resolute martyrdom, unto which he was pursued by the priess, bishops, moncks, and friers of those dayes.

Dedication to Sir Henrye Bourchier, prefixed to The Legend and Defence of the Noble Knight and Martyr Sir Jhon Oldcassle. Manuscript in the Bodleian Library, Oxford. Printed by Mr. J. O. Phillipps (Hallwell) in his work, entitled, On the Character of Sir John Falstaff, as originally exhibited by Shakespeare in the two parts of King Henry IV. 1841. [12mo.]

NATHANIEL FIELD.

doe heare

Your Lordship this faire morning is to fight,

And for your honor. Did you ever fee
The play where the fat knight, hight Oldcastle,

Did tell you truely what this honor was?

Amends for Ladies. 1639. [4to.]

THOMAS ROBINSON, 1630.

ND when he is merrily disposed (as that is not seldom) then must his darling Kate Knightly, play him a merry fit, and sister Mary Brooke, or some other of his late-come wags, must sing him one baudy song or other to digest his meat. Then after supper it is usual for him to reade a little of 'Venus and Adonis,' the 'Jests of George Peele,' or some such scurrilous booke; for there are sew idle pamphlets printed in England which he hath not in the house.

The Anatomie of the English Nunnery at Lisbon in Portugal: Dissected and laid open by one that was sometime a younger Brother of the Convent, &c.

Published by Authority. 1630. [410.]

JOHN TAYLOR, THE WATER POET, 1630.

N Paper many a Poet now furvives Or elfe their lines had perish'd with their lives.

Old Chaucer, Gower, and Sir Thomas More, Sir Philip Sidney who the Lawrell wore, Spencer, and Shakefpeare did in Art excell, Sir Edward Dyer, Greene, Nash, Daniel, Silvester, Beaumont, Sir John Harington, Forgetfulnesse their workes would over run, But that in Paper they immortally Doe live in spight of Death, and cannot dye.

The Praise of Hemp seed. Works iii, 1630, p. 72. [Fo.]

JOHN TAYLOR, THE WATER POET, 1630.

ND to conclude, fir Bevis, Ascapart, Gog-magog, or our English fir John Falslaff, were but shrimps to this buzzeling Bombards longitude, latitude, altitude, and crassitude, for he passes, and surpasses the whole Germane multitude.

I am no fooner eased of him, but Gregory Gandergoose, an Alderman of Gotham, catches me by the goll, demanding if Bohemia be a great Towne, and whether there bee any meate in it, and whether the last fleet of ships be arrived there:

Taylor's Travels. Works iii, 1630, pp. 80 & 90. [Fo.]

JOHN MILTON, 1630.

An Epitaph on the admirable Dramaticke Poet, W. Shakespeare.

HAT neede my Shakespeare for his honour'd bones,

The labour of an Age, in piled flones

Or that his hallow'd Reliques should be hid Under a starre-ypointing Pyramid? Dear Sonne of Memory, great Heire of Fame, What needst Thou such dull witnesse of thy Name?

Thou in our wonder and aftonishment
Hast built thy self a lasting Monument:
For whil'st to th' shame of slow-endevouring
Art

Thy easie numbers flow, and that each part, [heart]
Hath from the leaves of thy unvalued Booke,
Those Delphicke Lines with deepe Impression tooke

Then thou our fancy of her felf bereaving, Dost make us Marble with too much conceiving,

And fo Sepulcher'd in fuch pompe dost lie That Kings for fuch a Tombe would wish to die.

> Prefixed to the Second Folio Edition of Shakefpeare's Works: appended (with 4 variations) to Shakefpeare's Poems, 1640, and republished in Milton's Poems, 1645, p. 27.

THOMAS FULLER, 1631.

Stratford on Avon in this County; in whom three eminent Poets may feem in fome fort to be compounded.

- 1. Martial, in the warlike found of his Surname (whence fome may conjecture him of a Military extraction) Hastivibrans, or Shake-speare.
- 2. Ovid, the most naturall and witty of all Poets; and hence it was that Queen Elizabeth, coming into a Grammar-School, made this extemporary verse,

'Perfius a Crab-staffe, Bawdy Martial, Ovid a fine Wag.'

3. Plautus, who was an exact Comedian, yet never any Scholar, as our Shake-speare (if alive) would confesse himself. Adde to all these, that though his Genius generally was jocular and inclining him to festivity, yet he could (when so disposed) be folenn and ferious, as appears by his Tragedies; so that Heraclitus himself (I mean if secret and unseen) might afford to smile at his Comedies, they were so merry; and Democritus scarce forbear to sigh at his Tragedies, they were so mournfull.

He was an eminent instance of the truth of that Rule, 'Poeta not fit, sed nascitur'; one is not made, but born a Poet. Indeed his Learning was very little, fo that, as Cornish diamonds are not polished by any Lapidary, but are pointed and smoothed even as they are taken out of the Earth, so Nature itself was all the Art which was used upon him.

Many were the Wet-combates betwixt [Wit] him and Ben Jonfon; which too I behold like a Spanish great Gallion and an English Man of War: Master Jonfon (like the former) was built far higher in Learning; folid, but flow, in his performances. Shake-speare, with the English Man of War, lesser in bulk, but lighter in failing, could turn with all tides, tack about, and take advantage of all winds, by the quickness of his Wit and Invention. He died anno domini 16.., and was buried at Stratford upon Avon, the Town of his Nativity.

The Worthies of England: Warwickshire. 1662. [Fo.] pp. 120-126.

BEN JONSON, 1629-1630.

O doubt fome mouldy tale,

Like Pericles; and stale

As the shrieve's crusses, and nasty as his fish—

Scraps, out [of] every dish
Throwne forth, and rak't into the common tub,
May keep up the Play-club:
There, sweepings do as well
As the best order'd meale,
For, who the relish of these ghests will sit,
Needs set them, but, the almes-basket of wit.

Ode appended to The New Inn, or The Light Heart. 1631. [4to.]

OWEN FELTHAM, 1630.

UG, Pierce, Peck, Fly, and all
Your Jests so nominal,
Are things so far beneath an able Brain,

As they do throw a stain
Through all th' unlikely plot, and do displease
As deep as Pericles,
Where yet there is not laid
Before a Chamber-maid
Discourse so weigh'd, as might have serv'd of old

For Schools, when they of Love & Valour told.

Lusoria or, Occasional Pieces. No. xx.

An answer to the Ode of, Come leave the loathed Stage, &c. 1630. [4to.]

1632.

Upon the Effigies of my worthy Friend, the Author, Master William Shakespeare and his Workes.

PECTATOR, this Life's Shaddow is; To fee

The truer image and a livelier he,

Turne Reader. But, observe his Comicke vaine,

Laugh, and proceed next to a Tragicke straine, Then weep, So when thou find'st two contraries,

Two different passions from thy rapt soule rife,

Say, (who alone effect fuch wonders could)
Rare Shake-speare to the life thou dost behold.

Prefixed to the Second Folio Edition of Shakefpeare's Works. [Anon.]

I. M. S., 1632.

On Worthy Master Shakespeare and his Poems.

MIND reflecting ages past, whose cleere

And equall furface can make things

appeare

Distant a Thousand yeares, and represent Them in their lively colours, just extent. To outrun hasty time, retrive the fates, Rowle backe the heavens, blow ope the iron gates

Of death and Lethe, where (confused) lye Great heapes of ruinous mortalitie. In that deepe duskie dungeon to discerne

A royall Ghost from Churles: By art to learne The Phisiognomie of shades, and give Them suddaine birth, wondring how oft they live.

What flory coldly tells, what Poets faine At fecond hand, and picture without braine Senfelesse and soullesse showes. To give a Stage (Ample and true with life) voyce, action, age, As Plato's yeare and new Scene of the world Them unto us, or us to them had hurld.

To raife our auncient Soveraignes from their herfe

Make Kings his subjects, by exchanging verfe

Enlive their pale trunkes, that the present age Joyes in their joy, and trembles at their rage: Yet so to temper passion, that our eares

Take pleasure in their paine; And eyes in teares

Both weepe and fmile; fearefull at plots fo fad, Then, laughing at our feare; abus'd and glad To be abus'd, affected with that truth Which we perceive is false; pleas'd in that

Which we perceive is false; pleas'd in that ruth

At which we flart; and by elaborate play
Tortur'd and tickled; by a crablike way
Time past made pastime, and in ugly fort Disgorging up his ravaine for our sport
—— While the Plebeian Impe, from losty throne,

Creates and rules a world, and workes upon Mankind by fecret engines; Now to move A chilling pitty, then a rigorous love:

To strike up and stroake down, both joy and ire;

But by himselfe, his tongue and his owne brest,

Was Shakespeares freehold, which his cunning braine

Improv'd by favour of the ninefold traine.

The buskind Muse, the Commicke Queene, the graund

And lowder tone of Clio; nimble hand, And nimbler foote of the melodious paire, The Silver voyced Lady; the most faire Calliope, whose speaking silence daunts.

And she whose prayse the heavenly body chants.

These joyntly woo'd him, envying one another (Obey'd by all as Spouse, but lov'd as brother) And wrought a curious robe of sable grave Fresh greene, and pleasant yellow, red most brave.

And conftant blew, rich purple, guiltleffe white

The lowly Ruffet, and the Scarlet bright; Branch'd and embroydred like the painted Spring

Each leafe match'd with a flower, and each ftring

Of golden wire, each line of filke; there run Italian workes whose thred the Sisters spun; And there did sing, or seeme to sing, the

choyce

Birdes of a forraine note and various voyce. Here hangs a mossey rocke; there playes a faire

But chiding fountaine purled: Not the ayre,

Nor cloudes nor thunder, but were living drawne,

Not out of common Tiffany or Lawne.

But fine materialls, which the Muses know

And onely know the countries where they grow.

Now, when they could no longer him enjoy In mortall garments pent; death may destroy

They fay his body, but his verse shall live And more then nature takes, our hands shall give.

In a leffe volumne, but more strongly bound Shakefpeare shall breath and speake, with Laurell crown'd

Which never fades. Fed with Ambrofian meate

In a well-lyned vesture rich and neate.

So with this robe they cloath him, bid him weare it

For time shall never staine, nor envy teare it.

The friendly admirer of his Endowments.

Prefixed to the Second Folio Edition of Shakefpeare's Works.

WILLIAM PRYNNE, 1632.

* Ben Johnsons, *
Shackspeers, and others.

OME Play-books fince I first undertooke this subject, are growne from Quarto into Folio; which yet beare fo good a price and fale, that I cannot but with griefe relate it, they are now† new-printed in farre better paper than most Octavo or Quarto Bibles, which hardly finde fuch vent as they: And can then one Quarto Tractate against Stage-playes be thought too large, when as it must affault fuch ample Play-house Volumes? Besides, our Quarto-Play-bookes fince the first sheetes of this my Treatife came unto the Presse. have come forth in fucht abundance, and found fo many customers, that they almost exceede all number, one studie being scarce able to-holde them, and two yeares time too little to peruse them all.

+ Shackspeers Plaies are printed in the best crowne paper, far better than most Bibles.

‡ Above forty thousand Play-bookes have been printed and vented within these two years.

> Histrio-mastix, The Players Scourge or Actors Tragædie. 1633. [4to.] (Address "To the Christian Reader." fo. 1.)

SIR ASTON COKAINE, 1632.

HOU more then Poet, our Mercurie (that art

Apollo's Meffenger, and dost impart His best expressions to our eares) live long To purifie the slighted English tongue, That both the Nymphes of Tagus, and of Poe, May not henceforth despise our language so. Nor could they doe it, if they ere had seene The matchlesse features of the faerie Queene; Read Johnson, Shakespeare, Beaumont, Fletcher, or Thy neat-limnd peeces, skilfull Maffinger.

Commendatory Verses prefixed to Massinger's Emperour of the East. 1632. [4to.]

WILLIAM ROWLEY, 1633.

LEXANDER. Good fir, be fatisfied; the widow and my fifter fung both one fong; and what was't, but Crabbed age and youth cannot live together.

A Match at Midnight. Act v, Sc. 1. 1633. [4to.]

WILLIAM HABINGTON, 1634.

To a Friend, Inviting him to a meeting upon promife.

AY you drinke beare, or that adult'rate wine

Which makes the zeale of Amsterdam divine;

If you make breach of promife. I have now So rich a Sacke, that even your felfe will bow T' adore my Genius. Of this wine should Prynne

Drinke but a plenteous glaffe, he would beginne

A health to Shakespeares ghost.

Castara. 1634. The Second Part. [4to. 8th Poem.]

THOMAS HEYWOOD, 1635.

UR moderne Poets to that passe are driven,

Those names are curtal'd which they first had given;

And, as we wisht to have their memories drown'd,

We fcarcely can afford them halfe their found.

Rob. Greene.

Greene, who had in both Academies ta'ne Degree of Master, yet could never gaine To be call'd more than Robin: who had he Profest ought save the Muse, Serv'd, and [aught] been Free

After a feven yeares Prentifeship; might have (With credit too) gone Robert to his grave.

Christ. Marlo.

Marlo, renown'd for his rare art and wit, Could ne're attaine beyond the name of Kit; Although his Hero and Leander did Thomas Kid.

Merit addition rather. Famous Kid

Thom. Watson. Was call'd but Tom. Tom Watfon, though he wrote

Able to make Apollo's felfe to dote Upon his Muse; for all that he could strive, Yet never could to his full name arrive.

Thomas Nash.

Tom Nash (in his time of no small esteeme) Could not a second syllable redeeme.

Francis Bewmont.

Excellent Bewmont, in the formost ranke Of the rar'st Wits, was never more than Franck.

William Shakespeare.

Mellifluous Shake-speare, whose inchanting Quill

Commanded Mirth or Passion, was but Will.

Benjamin Johnson.

And famous Johnson, though his learned Pen Be dipt in Castaly, is still but Ben.

John Fletcher. John Webster, &c.

Fletcher and Webster, of that learned packe None of the mean'ft, yet neither was but Jacke.

Deckers but Tom; nor May, nor Middleton. And hee's now but Jacke Foord, that once was John.

> The Hierarchie of the Bleffed Angells. Lib. 4. 1635. p. 206. [Fo.]

JASPER MAYNE, 1638.

LSE (though wee all conspir'd to make thy Hearse

Our Works) fo that 't had beene but one great Verfe,

Though the Priest had translated for that time The Liturgy, and buried thee in Rime, So that in Meter wee had heard it faid, Poetique dust is to Poetique laid:

And though that dust being Shakspear's, thou might'st have

Not his roome, but the Poet for thy grave; So that, as thou didst Prince of Numbers dye And live, fo now thou mightst in Numbers lie, 'Twere fraile folemnity; Verses on Thee

And not like thine, would but kind Libels be;

Who without Latine helps had'ft beene as

As Beaumont, Fletcher, or as Shakespeare were:

And like them, from thy native Stock could'st fay,

Poets and Kings are not borne every day.

Jonsonus Virbius. 1638. pp. 29 & 33. [4to.]

OWEN FELTHAM, 1638.

O in our Halcyon dayes, we have had now

Wits, to which, all that after come, must bow.

And should the Stage compose her self a Crowne

Of all those wits, which hitherto sh'as knowne: Though there be many that about her brow Like sparkling stones, might a quick lustre throw:

Yet Shakespeare, Beaumont, Johnson, these three shall Make up the Jem in the point Verticall.

And now fince Jonsons gone, we well may fay,

The Stage hath feene her glory and decay.

Jonsonus Virbius. 1638. [410.]

RICHARD WEST, 1638.

HAKESPEARE may make griefe merry, Beaumonts stile Ravish and melt anger into a smile;

In winter nights, or after meales they be,
I must confesse very good companie:
But thou exact'st our best houres industrie;

We may read them; we ought to studie thee:

Jonfonus Virbius. 1638. [4to.]

H. RAMSAY, 1638.

HAT are his fauls (O Envy!) that you speake
English at Court, the learned Stage acts Greeke?

That Latine Hee reduc'd, and could command

That which your Shakespeare scarce could understand?

Jonsonus Virbius. 1638. [4to.]

T. TERRENT, 1638.

AUD aliter nostri præmissa in principis ortum

Ludicra Chauceri, classifq; incompta

sequentum;

Nascenti apta parum divina hæc machina regno,

In nostrum servanda suit tantæq; decebat Prælusisse Deos ævi certamina samæ; Nec geminos vates, nec Te Shakspeare silebo, Aut quicquid sacri nostros conjecit in annos Consilium Fati:

Jonsonus Virbius. 1638. [410.]

JAMES MERVYN, 1638.

HERE are fome men doe hold, there is a place

Cal'd Limbus Patrum, if fuch have the grace

To wave that Schifme, and Poëtarum[vice Patrum] faid

They of that faith had me a member made, That Limbus I could have beleev'd thy braine Where Beamont, Fletcher, Shakefpeare, & a traine

Of glorious Poets in their active heate Move in that Orbe, as in their former feate. When thou began'st to give thy Master life, Me thought I saw them all, with friendly strife

Each casting in his dose, Beamont his weight, Shakespeare his mirth, and Fletcher his conceit, With many more ingredients, with thy skill So sweetely tempered, that the envious quill And tongue of Criticks must both write and fay,

They never yet beheld a fmoother Play.

Lines "On Mr. James Shirley his Royall Master." Prefixed to the Edition of 1638.
[4to.]

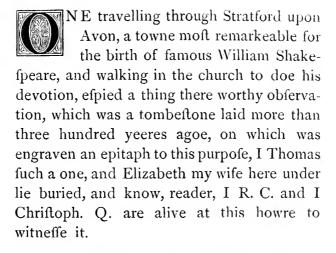

WILLIAM CHILLINGWORTH, 1638.

O that as a foolish fellow who gave a Knight the Lye, desiring withall leave of him to set his Knighthood aside, was answered by him, that he would afide, was answered by him, that he would not suffer any thing to be set aside that belonged unto him: So might we justly take it amisse, that conceiving as you doe ignorance and repentance such necessary things for us, you are not more willing to consider us with them, then without them.

The Religion of Protestants a Safe Way to Salvation, &c. Chap. 1. Part 1. § 5. p. 33. 1638. [Fo.]

1639.

A Banquet of Jests or Change of Cheare. 1639. [12mo.]

R[OBERT] C[HAMBERLAIN], 1639.

194.

NE asked another what Shakespeares
Works were worth, all being bound together. He answered, not a farthing. Not worth a farthing! said he; why so? He answered that his plays were worth a great deale of mony, but he never heard, that his works were worth any thing at all.

Conceits, Clinches, Flashes, and Whimzies. Newly studied, with some Collections, but those never published before in this kinde. 1639. [12mo.]

[Reprinted in Hazlitt's Shakespeare Jest-Books. Third series. 1864. Extract, p. 49.]

THOMAS BANCROFT, 1639.

To Shakespeare.

HY Muses sugred dainties seeme to us

Like the fam'd Apples of old Tantalus:

For we (admiring) fee and heare thy straines, But none I fee or heare, those sweets attaines.

To the fame.

Thou hast so us'd thy Pen, (or shooke thy Speare)

That Poets startle, nor thy wit come neare.

Two Bookes of Epigrammes, and Epitaphs. 1639. [4to.] Nos. 118 and 119.

1640.

To Mr. William Shake-speare.

HAKE-SPEARE, we must be silent in thy praise,

'Cause our encomion's will but blast

thy Bayes,

Which envy could not, that thou didft so well; Let thine own histories prove thy Chronicle.

> Witts Recreations Selected from the finest Fancies of Moderne Muses. With A Thousand outLandish Proverbs. Epigram 25. Anon. 1640. [12mo.]

RICHARD BROME, 1638.

HESE lads can act the Emperor's lives all over,

And Shakespeare's Chronicled Histories to boot;

And were that Cæfar, or that English Earl, That lov'd a play and player so well, now living,

I would not be outvyed in my delights.

Antipodes. 1640. [4to.]

JOHN BENSON, 1640.

To the Reader.

HERE prefume (under favour) to prefent to your view, fome excellent and fweetely composed Poems, of Master William Shakespeare, Which in themfelves appeare of the fame purity, the Authour himselfe then living avouched; they had not the fortune by reason of their Infancie in his death, to have the due accommodatio of proportionable glory, with the rest of his everliving Workes, yet the lines of themselves will afford you a more authentick approbation than my affurance any way can, to invite your allowance, in your perufall you shall find them Seren, cleere and eligantly plaine, fuch gentle straines as shall recreate and not perplexe your braine, no intricate or cloudy stuffe to puzzell intellect, but perfect eloquence: fuch as will raise your admiration to his praise: this affurance I know will not differ from your acknowledgment. And certaine I am. my opinion will be feconded by the fufficiency of these ensuing Lines; I have beene somewhat folicitus to bring this forth to the perfect view of all men; and in fo doing, glad to be ferviceable for the continuance of glory to the deferved Author in these Poems.

Address prefixed to Shakespeare's Poems. 1640. [12mo.]

LEONARD DIGGES, 1623.

To the Memorie of the deceafed Author Maister
W. Shakespeare.

HAKE-SPEARE, at length thy pious fellowes give

The world thy Workes: thy Workes, by which, out-live

Thy Tombe, thy name must: when that stone is rent,

And Time diffolves thy Stratford Moniment, Here we alive shall view thee still. This Booke,

When Braffe and Marble fade, shall make thee looke

Fresh to all Ages: when Posteritie

Shall loath what's new, thinke all is prodegie That is not Shake-fpeares; ev'ry Line, each Verse, Here shall revive, redeeme thee from thy Herse.

Nor Fire, nor cankring Age, as Nafo faid, Of his, thy wit-fraught Booke shall once invade.

Nor shall I e're beleeve, or thinke thee dead (Though mist) untill our bankrout Stage be sped

(Impossible) with some new strain t' out-do

Paffions of Juliet, and her Romeo; Or till I heare a Scene more nobly take, Then when thy half-Sword parlying Romans fpake,

Till these, till any of thy Volumes rest Shall with more fire, more feeling be exprest, Be fure, our Shake-speare, thou canst never dye,

But crown'd with Lawrell, live eternally.

Prefixed to the First Folio Edition of Shakespeare's Works.

LEONARD DIGGES, 1640.

Upon Master William Shakespeare, the deceased Authour, and his Poems.

I must love

Of never dying Shakefpeare, who alone, Is argument enough to make that one. First, that he was a Poet none would doubt, That heard th' applause of what he sees set out Imprinted; where thou hast (I will not say Reader his Workes for to contrive a Play: To him twas none) the patterne of all wit, Art without Art unparaleld as yet.

Next Nature onely helpt him, for looke thorow This whole Booke, thou shalt find he doth not borrow,

One phrase from Greekes, nor Latines imitate, Nor once from vulgar Languages Translate, Nor Plagiari-like from others gleane, Nor begges he from each witty friend a Scene To peece his Acts with, all that he doth write Is pure his owne, plot, language exquisite,

But oh! what praise more powerfull can we give

The dead, then that by him the Kings men live,

His Players, which should they but have shar'd the Fate,

All elfe expir'd within the short Termes date; How could the Globe have prospered, since through want

Of change, the Plaies and Poems had growne fcant,

But happy Verse thou shalt be sung and heard, When hungry quills shall be such honour bard.

Then vanish upstart Writers to each Stage, You needy Poetasters of this Age,

Where Shakefpeare liv'd or spake, Vermine forbeare.

Least with your froth you spot them, come not neere;

But if you needs must write, if poverty

So pinch, that otherwise you starve and die,

On Gods name may the Bull or Cockpit have Your lame blancke Verse, to keepe you from the grave:

Or let new Fortunes younger brethren fee, What they can picke from your leane industry. I doe not wonder when you offer at Blacke-Friers, that you fuffer: tis the fate Of richer veines, prime judgements that have far'd

The worfe, with this deceafed man compar'd. So have I feene, when Cefar would appeare, And on the Stage at halfe-fword parley were, Brutus and Caffius: oh how the Audience Were ravish'd, with what wonder they went thence,

When fome new day they would not brooke a line,

Of tedious (though well laboured) Catiline; Sejanus too was irksome, they priz'de more Honest Iago, or the jealous Moore. And though the Fox and subtill Alchimist, Long intermitted could not quite be mist, Though these have sham'd all the Ancients, and might raise,

Their Authours merit with a crowne of Bayes. Yet these sometimes, even at a friends desire Acted, have scarce defrai'd the Seacoale sire And doore-keepers: when let but Falsaffe come,

Hall, Poines, the rest you scarce shall have a roome

All is fo pefter'd: let but *Beatrice*And Benedicke be feene, loe in a trice
The Cockpit Galleries, Boxes, all are full
To hear Malvoglio, that croffe garter'd Gull.
Briefe, there is nothing in his wit fraught Booke,

Whose found we would not heare, on whose worth looke

Like old coynd gold, whose lines in every page,

Shall passe true currant to succeeding age.

But why doe I dead Sheakfpeares praise recite, Some second Shakefpeare must of Shakefpeare write;

For me tis needlesse, since an host of men, Will pay to clap his praise, to free my Pen.

Prefixed to Shakespeare's Poems. 1640. [12mo.]

JOHN WARREN, 1640.

Of Mr. William Shakefpeare.

HAT, lofty Shakef peare, art againe reviv'd?

And Virbius like now show'st thy felfe twise liv'd,

Tis [Benson's] love that thus to thee is showne, The labours his, the glory still thine owne. These learned Poems amongst thine afterbirth,

That makes thy name immortall on the earth, Will make the learned still admire to see, The Muses gifts so fully infus'd on thee. Let Carping Momus barke and bite his fill, And ignorant Davus slight thy learned skill: Yet those who know the worth of thy desert, And with true judgement can discerne thy Art,

Will be admirers of thy high tun'd straine, Amongst whose number let me still remaine.

Prefixed to Shakespeare's Poems. 1640. [12mo.]

1637 circa.

An Elegy on the Death of that famous Writer and Actor Mr. William Shakespeare.

DARE not doe thy Memory that wrong,

Unto our larger griefes to give a tongue;

Ile onely figh in earnest, and let fall
My folemne teares at thy great Funerall;
For every eye that raines a showre for thee,
Laments thy losse in a sad Elegie.
Nor is it sit each humble Muse should have,
Thy worth his subject, now th' art laid in grave:

No its a flight beyond the pitch of those, Whose worthles Pamphlets are not sence in Prose.

Let learned Johnson sing a Dirge for thee, And sill our Orbe with mournefull harmony: But we neede no Remembrancer, thy Fame Shall still accompany thy honoured Name, To all posterity; and make us be, Sensible of what we lost in losing thee: Being the Ages wonder whose smooth Rhimes, Did more reforme than lash the looser Times. Nature her selfe did her owne selfe admire, As oft as thou wert pleased to attire Her in her native lusture, and confesse, Thy dressing was her chiefest comelinesse.
How can we then forget thee, when the age
Her chiefest Tutor, and the widdowed Stage
Her onely favorite in thee hath lost,
And Natures selfe, what she did bragge of most.

Sleepe then rich foule of numbers, whilft poore we,

Enjoy the profits of thy Legacie;
And thinke it happinesse enough we have,
So much of thee redeemed from the grave,
As may suffice to enlighten future times,
With the bright lustre of thy matchlesse Rhimes.

Anon. Appended to Shakespeare's Poems
1640. [12mo.]

JOHN JOHNSON, 1641.

HERE was also Shakespeere, who (as Cupid informed me) creepes into the Women's Closets about bed time; and if it were not for some of the old out-of-date Grandames (who are set over the rest as tutoresses) the young Sparkish Girles would read in Shakespeere day and night, so that they would open the Book or Tome, and the men with a Fescue in their hands should point to the Verse.

The Academy of Love, describing the Folly of younge-men and the Fallacie of Women, (Love's Library), 1641, p. 99. [4to.]

SIR WILLIAM D'AVENANT, 1636—1642 circa.

In Remembrance of Master William Shakespeare. Ode.

Ι.

EWARE (delighted Poets!) when you fing
To welcome Nature in the early Spring:

Your num'rous feet not tread
The banks of Avon; for each Flowre
(As it nere knew a Sun or Showre)
Hangs there, the penfive head.

2.

Each Tree, whose thick and spreading growth hath made

Rather a Night beneath the Boughs, then fhade,

(Unwilling now to grow,)
Looks like the Plume a Captain weares,
Whose rifled Falls are steept i' th teares
Which from his last rage flow.

3.

The piteous River wept it felf away
Long fince (Alas!) to fuch a fwift decay,
That reach the Map, and look
If you a River there can fpie:
And for a River your mock'd Eye,
Will finde a shallow Brooke.

SIR JOHN SUCKLING, 1636—1642 circa.

A Supplement of an Imperfect Copy of Verfes of Mr. Wil. Shakefpeares.

I

NE of her hands, one of her cheeks lay under,

Cozening the pillow of a lawfull kiffe,

Which therefore fwel'd and feem'd to part afunder,

As angry to be rob'd of fuch a bliffe:

The one lookt pale, and for revenge did long,

Whilft t'other blush't, cause it had done the wrong.

2

Out of the bed the other fair hand was
On a green fattin quilt, whose perfect white
Lookt like a Dazie in a field of graffe,

* And shew'd like unmelt snow unto the sight, There lay this pretty perdue, safe to keep The rest o th' body that lay sast asleep.

^{*} Thus far Shake-spear.

3

Her eyes (and therefore it was night) close laid,

Strove to imprison beauty till the morn, But yet the doors were of such fine stuffe made, That it broke through, and shew'd itself in fcorn.

> Throwing a kind of light about the place, Which turn'd to finiles stil as 't came near her face.

> > 4

Her beams (which fome dul men call'd hair) [call] divided

Part with her cheeks, part with her lips did fport,

But these, as rude, her breath put by still; some

Wiselyer downwards fought, but falling short,

Curl'd back in rings, and feem'd to turn agen

To bite the part fo unkindly held them in.

Fragmenta Aurea. A collection of all the Incomparable Peeces, written by Sir John Suckling. And published by a Friend to perpetuate his memory. Printed by his owne copies. 1646. p. 29-30. [8vo.]

SIR JOHN SUCKLING, 1636—1642 circa.

HE sweat of learned Johnson's brain,
And gentle Shakespear's eas'er strain,

A hackney-coach conveys you to, In fpite of all that rain can do: And for your eighteen pence you fit The Lord and Judge of all fresh wit.

Fragmenta Aurea: &c. 1646. p. 35. [8vo.]

JAMES SHIRLEY, APRIL, 1642.

OES this look like a Term? I cannot tell,

Our Poet thinks the whole Town is not well.

Has took fome Physick lately, and for fear Of catching cold dares not falute this Ayr. But ther's another reason, I hear say London is gone to York, 'tis a great way; Pox o' the Proverb, and of him say I, That look'd ore Lincoln, cause that was, must we

Be now translated North? I could rail to [too] On Gammar Shiptons Ghost, but 't wo' not doe,

The Town will still be flecking, and a Play Though ne'r fo new, will starve the fecond day:

Upon these very hard conditions, Our Poet will not purchase many Towns; And if you leave us too, we cannot thrive, I'l promise neither Play nor Poet live Till ye come back, think what you do, you see What audience we have, what Company

[&]quot;To Shakespear comes, whose mirth did once beguile

[&]quot;Dull hours, and buskind, made even forrow fmile,

- "So lovely were the wounds, that men would fay
- "They could endure the bleeding a whole day:
 He has but few friends lately, think o' that,
 Hee'l come no more, and others have his fate.
- "Fletcher the Mufes darling, and choice love
- " Of Phœbus, the delight of every Grove;
- "Upon whose head the Laurel grew, whose wit
- " Was the Times wonder, and example yet,
- 'Tis within memory, Trees did not throng,

As once the Story faid to Orpheus fong.

- "Johnson, t' whose name, wife Art did bow, and Wit
- " Is only justified by honouring it:
- "To hear whose touch, how would the learned Quire
- "With filence stoop? and when he took his Lyre,
- "Apollo dropt his Lute, asham'd to fee
- " A Rival to the God of Harmonie.

You do forfake him too, we must deplore

This fate, for we do know it by our door.

How must this Author fear then, with his guilt

Of weakness to thrive here, where late was fpilt

The Mufes own blood, if being but a few, You not confpire, and meet more frequent too? There are not now nine Mufes, and you may Be kind to ours, if not, he bad me fay,

Though while you careless kill the rest, and laugh,

Yet he may live to write your Epitaph.

The Sifters. 1652. [8vo.] Prologue at the Black-Fryers.

Elucidations

TO

THE SECOND PERIOD

OF

SHAKESPEARE'S CENTURIE OF PRAYSE.

ELUCIDATIONS.

PAGE 87.

Steevens conjectured that the scribe wrote Sophoclem, not Socratem. Assuredly one who had scholarship enough to compose the verses could hardly have believed that the o in the latter word had a common quantity. Besides the comparison of Shakespeare to Sophocles is significant: to Socrates trifling: Ben Jonson and Samuel Sheppard compare Shakespeare to Sophocles. (See pp. 99, 203, & 206.) If Sheppard wrote Sophocles in an English verse, that would be irrelevant; for he would not have written it in a Latin one.

PAGE 88.

Sir William Drummond was evidently a weak-minded man, whose memory had the knack of retaining only what was trivial or worthless. We may be quite sure that Jonson's assertions were not given in this naked form. No one understood Shakespeare's art better than Jonson; and he could hardly have based the charge of wanting art on geographical or on chronological errors, which Shakespeare took, not ignorantly, but as he found them in the current stories. Ben, certainly, meant to say, that the art of Shakespeare would have been finer had he exercised a more jealous censorship on his own writings. Drummond's report of his friend's censure, like most broad statements involving antithesis, found ready acceptance and currency. In 1631 Fuller asserts that "Nature itself was all the Art which was used upon him." (p. 116): which Cartwright echoes in 1651: "Nature was all his art:" Dryden expands the Jonson-Drummond censure in his Defence of the Epilogue; and forty-two years after its utterance we meet it once more in the Diary of the Rev. John Ward, who had "heard that Shakspeare was a natural wit without any art at all." But Ben Jonson and L. Digges allow Shakespeare a sort of art. The former writes:

"Yet must I not give Nature all: Thy Art,
My gentle Shakespeare, must enjoy a part." p. 100.
and Digges assigns him:

"Art without Art unparaleld as yet." p. 145.

PAGE 89.

Painful as the avowal may be, the readers of this catena are advised that, in the editor's judgment, all the additions (to these lines) published by Mr. J. P. Collier in his New Particulars, 1836, p. 29-31, are spurious, and of modern coinage. (See also Collier's History of Dramatic Poetry and of the Stage, 1, 430, note.) The allusion in lines 2-5 seems to be to Hamlet's leaping into Ophelia's grave, to outface Laertes; and to his bidding the gravediggers to pile upon them "millions of acres." The remainder, however, has no bearing on the play of Hamlet.

Page 90.

These lines, which are usually attributed to the elder W. Basse, have come down to us in so many discrepant versions, manuscript as well as printed, that it is difficult to determine their original or their finished form. The version selected for this work is derived, at second-hand, from a manuscript which, unfortunately, the editor has not had an opportunity of inspecting. But the choice was made for cogent reasons. The original was certainly a sonnet, of the usual number of lines; to which two lines (now standing as the 13th and 14th) were subsequently added. The addition, probably, occasioned changes in other lines; and some of the manuscript and printed versions we possess are merely experimental ways of making the augmented elegy hold together. The couplet introduced an absurdity, which the lines in Donne's Poems do not contain: for, first, Shakespeare's peace would not be unmolested simply because his grave was unshared; and secondly, it would not be unmolested at all, if others were in after time to be laid by Why not, then, adopt the version in Donne's Poems? Because it is evident that at least one line in it was altered from one in a version which had the additional couplet: viz. line II. The Ashmole copyist had written curved for carved, as the word stands in the Brander copy, and in both the Rawlinson copies: and it was evidently from a version like that or the Ashmole copy, which read curved, that the Donne copyist obtained his singular blunder We believe that the Fennell version (adopted as our text), "In this uncarved marble," is an earlier, as it is unquestionably a much finer, reading than either "Under this carved marble," or "Under this sable marble," which last occurs in the Sloane copy. As much might be said in defence of the other portions of the Fennell version. Yet it is quite certain that it is not the original, but the finished form of the elegy.

Poffess as lord, not tenant, to thy or of or the grave,

None of the versions comport with the status quo in Westminster Abbey, where Chaucer's tomb is pretty central between Spencer's and Beaumont's: whereas, in the Fennell copy and Donne's version Beaumont is the central figure, and in all the rest Spencer lies between Beaumont and Chaucer.

In the original draft it is most likely that lines 5-9 ran (as in the Sloane copy, with one exception,) thus:

If your precedencie in death doeth barre A fourth to have place in your fepulchre, Under this facred marble of thy owne Sleep, rare Tragedian, Shakespeare, sleepe alone, That unto others, &c.

Perhaps Donne or Basse improved upon them, thus:

But if precedencie in death doe or doth barre

A fourth place in your facred fepulchre,
Under this [] marble of thy owne
Sleep, rare Tragedian, Shakespeare, sleep alone, &c.

and further it seems not improbable that the third of these lines became,

In this unsharéd marble of thy owne, before the additional couplet was added, when unshared was supplanted by uncarved.

Of the following early manuscript copies, known, or believed to be extant, the first is that which has been adopted in the text; the second and third are cited by Malone, but the editor has not had an opportunity of consulting either. A diligent and redoubled search among the Rawlinson manuscripts has failed to discover the third.

- (1.) A collection of Miscellaneous Poems in a handwriting of the early part of the reign of Charles I; from which these verses are printed in Fennell's Shakespeare Repository, p. 10.
- (2.) A collection of manuscript poems, formerly in the possession of Gustavus Brander, Esq., containing these verses. Malone dates this version "soon after the year 1621," because he thinks it likely "that these lines were written recently after Shakespeare's death;" as if Shakespeare had died in 1621!

- (3.) A volume of manuscript poems composed by W. Herrick and others, and inter alia Basse's lines; in the Rawlinson Collection, Bodleian Library, Oxford.
- (4.) A volume of manuscripts, containing poems by Bishop Corbet, and inter alia Basse's lines; also in the Rawlinson Collection.
- (5.) A volume of manuscripts, bearing on the title-page, "J. A. Christchurch," and "Robert Killigrew his booke writen [or witnes] by his Majesties ape Gorge Harison;" where Basse's lines are on p. 114. No. 1792 (not 1702, as Malone quotes it) in the Sloane Collection, British Museum.
- (6.) A volume of manuscripts, containing six poems by W. Herrick, and also Basse's lines. Vol. 38, No. 185, original (black) numbering, 421 in modern (red) numbering, in the Ashmole Collection: Bodleian Library, Oxford.

To these may be added the following four early printed versions.

- I. Donne's Poems. 1633. [4to.]
- II. Verses appended to Shakespeare's Poems. 1640. [12mo.]
- III. Witt's Recreations: selected, &c. 1640 [12mo.], where Basse's lines are numbered 5.
- IV. Witt's Recreations Augmented, &c. 1641 [12mo.], where Basse's lines are numbered 144.

Of these, II, III, and IV are substantially the same, and follow, in the main, No. (4).

As to the evidence of authorship: In (1) the lines are headed "Mr. Basse": (2) "Basse his elegie one Poett Shakespeare, who died in April, 1616:" (3)

"Shakespeare's Epitaph," without author's name."
(4) Basse his elegye on Shakespeare:" (5) No heading, nor author's name. (6) Subscribed "finis, Dr. Donne." In I they are assigned to Dr. Donne; but they are omitted from the next edition of his Poems. In II they are subscribed W. B.: in III and IV they are anonymous.

PAGE 92.

The peroration of this address is so good as to evoke the suspicion that it is not original. Malone quotes from Morley's Dedication of a Book of Songs to Sir Robert Cecil, 1595, a very similar passage. But in truth the peroration is literally translated from Pliny's dedicatory epistle to Vespatian, prefixed to his Natural History, (§ ii ed. Sillig) which runs thus:

diis lacte ruftici multæque gentes supplicant, et mola tantum salsa litant qui non habent tura; nec ulli suit vitio deos colere quoquo modo posset.

That is, country people and many nations offer milk to their gods; and they who have not incense obtain their requests with only meal and salt; nor was it imputed to any as a fault to worship the gods in whatever way they could.

The translator of 1623 added "cream and fruits" in one place, and "gummes" in another: and for mola salsa appears to have, not unskilfully, caught up Horace's "farre pio" (Odes III, 23 ll. 17-20). He adds, too, very gracefully, that "the meanest things are made more precious when they are dedicated to temples." If he employed Philemon Holland's translation (1635) he did not reproduce its words.

PAGE 95.

The boast of these editors "that what he [Shakes-peare] thought, he uttered with that easiness, that wee have scarce received from him a blot [litura] in his papers," is seemingly confirmed by Ben Jonson

(p. 103): but it certainly involves a suppressio veri; for the greater part of the folio of 1623 could not have been printed from manuscript.

PAGE 97.

The editor cannot accept this epigram as a serious commendation of the portrait. It seems to say that the graver had been worsted in his strife with nature: and that, since he had so failed, the reader must turn from the picture to the book. But after all it may be mere conventional compliment. Mr. Grosart (Ed: of Sir John Beaumont's Poems, pp. 194 & xxv) hears in Ben's lines "an echo" of some in Beaumont's Elegiac Memorials of Worthies:

Or had it err'd, or made fome strokes amisse,
— For who can pourtray Vertue as it is?—
Art might with Nature have maintain'd her strife,
By curious lines to imitate true life.
But now those pictures want their lively grace,
As after death none can well draw the face:

Mr. Hain Friswell notices the resemblance "with a certain back twist" (as he writes it) of Ben's lines to the elegiac couplet under an old portrait (1588) of Sir Thomas More, in the Tres Thomae of Stapleton:

Corporis effigiem dedit ænea lamina. At ô si Effigiem mentis sic daret iste labor.

and in Venus and Adonis, we read,

Look, where a painter would furpass the life, His arts' with nature's workmanship at strife.

which Dryden echoes in his Epistle to Sir Godfrey Kneller:

Such are thy pieces, imitating life So near, they almost conquer in the strife.

We need not, however, go out of Shakespeare's "Booke" to find an instance of this common conceit:

the cutter
Was as another Nature, dumb, outwent her,
Motion and breath left out.

Cymbeline, ii, 4.

Mat. Smalwood, in his commendatory verses prefixed to Cartwright's Works, 1651, thus comments on the wretched print of Cartwright's face, which serves as frontispiece to the volume.

> Then, do not blame his ferious Brow and Look. 'Twill be thy Picture if thou read his Book:

PAGE 98.

It has not, hitherto, been observed, that Ben Jonson's forty couplets have a regular structure. The editor has ventured upon an innovation to indicate COCOO Fortunately the three marks of division, to which he has had recourse, fall on the top of each page, so that they serve indifferently as paginal decorations, or as the headings of the second, third, and fourth divisions. By virtue of the latter function, they indicate the following constituent parts of the poem.

- (I.) An Introduction each of eight couplets.

of Envy,

- (2.) An Address to Shakespeare) each of twelve
- (3.) An Address to Britain couplets. In the third, however, is a passing deviation, viz. "Thy Art, my Shakespeare," &c. A few obscurities in the course of this piece may be noted. no envy," &c., certainly does not mean what the editor of Brome's Five New Plays, 1658-9, imputes to it; as if Ben thought to lower Shakespeare by extravagantly praising him. He meant to say, that while Ignorance, Affection, or Malice, by excessive, indiscriminate or thefe ways Were not the paths I meant unto thy praise; unjust praise, would be sure to provoke the detraction for he could with full knowledge and strict impartiality award him the highest praise that could be expressed. One is reminded (especially by the seventh couplet) of what Ben wrote in Cynthia's Revels, where Crites is made to say,

So they be ill men, If they fpake worfe, 'twere better: for of fuch To be difpraifed, is the most perfect praise.

"I will not lodge thee," &c., refers to Basse's lines, and means that he will not class Shakespeare with Chaucer, Spenser, and Beaumont, because he is out of all proportion greater than they-men "of yeeres" or "for an age." Nor will he praise him by declaring how far he excelled Lily, Kid, and Marlow. Shakespeare, indeed, like them (yet beyond them) was, for the age in which he flourished; but he was also for all time, and not of an age. It is worth remarking, that on the occasion of the Tercentenary Celebration, in London, when "blinde Affection" worshipped the gigantic bust of Shakespeare, at the Agricultural Hall, "seeliest Ignorance" had surmounted the proscenium with the abominable travestie, HE WAS NOT FOR AN AGE, BUT FOR ALL TIME; and the same evil genius presided over Mr. John Leighton's "Official Seal for the National Shakespeare Committee," when he engraved on the scroll at the base of the device the same discreditable perversion, NOT FOR AN AGE BUT FOR ALL TIME. Mr. Frederick Brett Russell is to be congratulated on his fidelity and sense in surrounding his memorial salver with the actual line of Ionson.

"Leave thee alone for the comparison," &c., is almost repeated verbatim in Jonson's Timber, where he points to Bacon as "he who hath filled up all numbers, and performed that in our tongue which may be compared or preferred either to infolent Greece, or haughty Rome."

It is indeed as applicable to Bacon's prose as to Shakespeare's verse. Mr. W. H. Smith endeavours to make capital out of the coincidence in his Bacon and Shakespeare. 1857. pp. 35-36.

"For though thou had'st," &c. Here hadst is the subjunctive. The passage may be thus paraphrased.

"Even if thou hadft little scholarship, I would not seek to honour thee by calling thee, as others have done, Ovid, Plautus, Terence, &c., i.e., by the names of the classical poets, but would rather invite them to witness how far thou dost outshine them."

Ben does not assert that Shakespeare had "little Latine and less Greek," as the editor of Brome, as Aubrey, and others understand him: though doubtless, compared with Ben's finished scholarship, Shakespeare's was small: but that the lack of that accomplishment could only redound to Shakespeare's honour, who could be Greek or Roman, according to the requirements of the play and the situation.

After all, one could wish that Ben had said all this in Shakespeare's lifetime; and one is reminded of what Horace says of the great poet (Epist. II, i 13-14).

Urit enim fulgore fuo, qui prægravat artes Infra fe positas: extinctus amabitur idem.

In some verses prefixed to Cartwright's Works, 1651, signed W. Towers, it is said, Thy skill in wit was not so poorely meek As theirs, whose little Latin and no Greek Confin'd their whole discourse to a street phrase, Such dialect as their next neighbour's was.

This was in allusion to Jonson's critique on Shakespeare.

PAGE 103.

In the remarks de Shakespeare nostrati we have, doubtless, Ben's closet-opinion of his friend, opposed as it seems to be to that in his address to Britain (p. 100), where Ben appears to praise him for that very quality "wherein he most faulted:" for evidently Shakespeare did not dream of conforming to the Horatian precept, (Sat. I, x. 72-73.)

Sæpe stylum vertas, iterum quæ digna legi sunt Scripturus.

Though Ben regretted and condemned his friend's rapidity of execution, it does not appear that he assumed (like Cowley, in a passage quoted in the Third Period,) the right "to prune and lop away" what did not square with his canons of criticism.

In his Timber, under the head, De Stylo, et optimo scribendi generis, Ben expatiates on the duty of self-restraint in composition. He says (inter alia dicta), "No matter how slow the style be at first, so it be laboured and accurate;" and again, "So that the sum of all is, ready writing makes not good writing; but good writing brings on ready writing: yet, when we think we have got the faculty, it is even then good to resist it;" &c.

Ben's critique on the passage (as it must have originally stood) in Julius Cæsar is captious. The justice of the cause is not inconsistent with wrong inflicted on others beside the expiator. Mr. J. O. Phillips (Halliwell) rightly observes, "If wrong is taken in the sense of injury or harm, as Shakespeare sometimes uses it, there is no absurdity in the line. [cf.] 'He shall have wrong.' 2 Henry VI, v, I." (Life of Shakespeare, 1848, p. 185.) Again, in A Winter's Tale, v, I, Paulina, speaking of the hapless Queen, says,

Had one fuch power, She had just cause.

Leontes. She had, and would incenfe me To murther her I marryed.

That is, she had just cause to incite him to do another a grievous wrong. This is even more amenable to Jonson's censure than the passage which fell under it. That the line in Julius Casar did sound ridiculous can well be credited; whence the alteration (by whom made we know not) which was so injuriously foisted into the playhouse copies, and which the editors, in deference to the over-venerated text of the first folio, still blindly follow. It is to the censured line that Ben alludes in the precedent extract (p. 102).

PAGE 106.

These lines have been attributed to John Marston, Jaspar Mayne, and James Mabbe. They are bad enough for Mayne, and good enough for Marston. Mr. Bolton Corney, who first preferred a claim on behalf of Mabbe, supported it by the following extract from Mabbe's translation of Guzman de Alfarache, Part I, p. 175; a work published by Blount, and attributed to Mateo Aleman. (see Notes and Queries: 2nd S., XI, 4.)

It is a miferable thing, and much to be pitied, that fuch an idol as one of these [a proud courtier], should affect particular adoration; not considering that he is but a man, a representant, a poor kind of comedian that acts his part upon the stage of the world, and comes forth with this or that office, thus and thus attended, or at least resembling such a person, and that when the play is done (which cannot be long) he must presently enter into the tyring-house of the grave, and be turned to dust and ashes as one of the sons of the earth, which is the common mother of us all.

Is there not, in I. M.'s poor lines, an allusion to the last words of Augustus? Vos omnes plaudite!

PAGE 107.

For the lines quoted in the first extract Burton trusted to his memory, for in his own copy in the Bodleian Library, they run thus:

the bushes in the way

Some catch her neck, some kisse her face,

Some twine about her thigh to make her stay:

She wildly breaketh from their strict embrace.

Venus and Adonis, 1602. 4to. st. 146.

The second line, which is exactly as Burton quotes it, has lost the words "by the." In the British Museum copy of the same edition, that line runs thus:

Some catch her by the neck, fome kiffe her face,

The omission was probably detected after a few copies had been pulled, and corrected before the edition was worked off. The Edinburgh edition 1627 was evidently printed from one of the uncorrected copies of the edition of 1602, for it reads eking out the line by the addition of "and" and "doe."

Some catch her neck, and fome doe kiffe her face,

In the second extract, the parenthesis, "like Benedict and Betteris in the comedie," was added in the third edition of Burton's book, issued in 1628. This is the earliest allusion to Much ado about nothing. "Betteris" is phonetic spelling: Beatrice was doubtless vulgarly so pronounced. The Marchioness of Newcastle, in one of her Sociable Letters, printed in the Third Period, spells the name Bettrice. Leonard Digges, however, (ante, p. 147) gives her three syllables.

The third extract quotes the concluding couplet of Romeo and Juliet. They run thus in the old folio:

For never was a ftory of more woe Than this of Juliet and her Romeo.

The old editions of The Anatomy of Melancholy, bear the dates, 1621, 1624, 1628, 1632, 1638, 1651-2, 1660 and 1676. The British Museum has copies of the first three and the last. That of 1651-2 was the first published after Burton's death (Jan. 7, 1639). The first edition (1621) does not contain any of the passages quoted.

PAGE 108.

Compare this extract with the following:

One word more, I befeech you; if you be not too much cloid with Fat Meate, our humble Author will continue the Story (with Sir John in it) and make you merry, with faire Katherine of France: where (for any thing I know) Falflaffe shall dye of a sweat, unlesse already he be kill'd with your hard Opinions: For Oid-Castle dyed a Martyr, and this is not the man.

Epilogue to 2 Henry IV.

According to Mr. J. P. Collier, John Weever, in the dedication of his Mirror of Martyrs, 1601, distinguishes between "this first true Oldcastle" (his own) and "the second false Oldcastle;" viz., that of Shakespeare's creation. (Ed. of Shakespeare, 1858, iii, 317, 423.)

PAGE 110.

Nathaniel Field (like Richard Brome, in his Merrie Beggars 1653, in a passage quoted in the Third Period) here refers to the speech of Falstaff, which concludes the first scene of 2 Henry IV, act v.

PAGE III.

By the use of the expression "idle pamphlets" Brother Robinson did not necessarily intend (as Mr. Collier supposes, Bibliog. and Crit. Account, ii, 274) to depreciate Shakespeare's poem. An "idle pamphlet," at that time of day, meant one which afforded diversion rather than edification. Surely "scurrilous booke" (to which Mr. Collier takes no exception) implies a much graver charge; and Sir Aston Cokaine imputes the same evil quality to Shakespeare's writings.

PAGE 112.

By an oversight the editor gave this passage from the folio 1630 instead of from the quarto 1620. It should properly have preceded the extract on p. 89. Farmer says it is "impossible to give the original dates" of John Taylor's pieces. "He may be traced as an author for more than half a century." (Boswell's Malone, 1821, vol. i, p. 367.)

PAGE 114.

We have the choice of three early printed versions of Milton's lines: I. The commendatory verses prefixed to the Folio Edition of Shakespeare, 1632.

2. Those appended to the unauthorised edition of Shakespeare's Poems, published in 1640.

3. The edition of Milton's poems published in 1645. We have preferred the first and least pleasing of the three, as being, unquestionably, Milton's first draft of the line: allowing, of course, that part is a press-error for "hart" (i.e., heart). The other versions correct that error, and also have "weake" for dull, and "livelong" for lasting. The second, by a press-error, reads "our selfe" instead of her selfe. The third has "it selfe." In the Folio Shakespeare and Fame are in Italics.

The expression "star-ypointing pyramid" was doubtless intended to signify, pointing to the stars: and the prefix y is similarly used by Sackville, in his legend, entitled, The Complaint of Henry Duke of Buckingham. (Sackville-West's Ed., p. 140.)

"Sans earthly guilt yeaufing both be flain."

(See Notes and Queries, 4th S., iv, p. 331.) Had the line in Milton run

"Under a star-ypointed pyramid," the sense would have been, under a pyramid surmounted with a star. (See Marsh's Lectures by Dr. Wm. Smith, 1866, Lecture xv, p. 232, note.) One is reminded of some lines attributed to Shakespeare, quoted by many editors and biographers of Shakespeare.

[&]quot;Not monumentall stone preserves our fame, Nor skye-aspiring piramids our name," and the assertion, that each heart hath

"Those delphic lines with deep impression took," recals a passage in Shakespeare's Lucrece, where he speaks of "The face, that map which deep impression bears, Of hard misfortune carved in it with tears."

Coleridge wrote the last four lines on the margin of one of Donne's letters to the Lady G., opposite the following passage:

'No prince would be loth to die that were affured of fo fair a tomb to preferve his memory.' (Notes Th. Pol. and Mifc., 1853, p. 258.)

Milton's meaning, however, is this. Every heart, by the plastic power of fancy, takes deep impression of Shakespeare's lines. Then, by deprivation of fancy, we are turned to marble; and we thus become an inscribed monument to Shakespeare. But the conceit is affected, and the conjugate use of "whilst" and "then" in these verses is, to say the least, very unusual.

PAGE 115.

We find Shakespeare treated as a name of "high qualitie," (i. e., a heroic name) in a work called Polydoron, n.d. but of the relative period.

Names were first questionlesse given for distinction, facultie, confanguinitie, desert, qualitie: for Smith, Taylor, Joyner, Saddler, &c., were doubtlesse of the trades; Johnson, Robinson, Williamson, of the blood; Sackville, Saville, names of honorable desert; Armestrong, Shakespeare of high qualitie:

Shakespeare, as Fuller says, is Hastivibrans in Latin. In Greek it is Δορίπαλτος and Έγχεσπάλος. cf. Spenser's Faery Queen, b. iv, c. iii, st. 10.

He, all enraged, his shivering speare did shake, And charging him asresh thus felly him bespake. Mr. Ruskin (Fors Clavigera: 15, 12) notes as a curious coincidence, "that the name of the chief poet of passionate Italy [was] 'the bearer of the wing,' and that of the chief poet of practical England, the bearer or shaker of the spear."

PAGE 117 AND 118.

Ben Jonson's verses were written as a vent for his indignation, after the failure of The New Inn had left him straitened and discomfited.

Owen Feltham's verses are a clever parody on Jonson's: Jug, Pierce, Peck, and Fly, are characters in Jonson's play. "Discourse so weighed" refers to the third and fourth acts of The New Inn.

T. Randolph, T. Carew, and J. Cleveland, all wrote odes to console Ben for his disappointment, and to win him back to his work. What an irritable, self-seeking, praise-loving old genius he was!

PAGE 120.

The editor has followed the example of all his predecessors in treating the letters, I. M. S. as the initials of the author's name: so he has placed them at the head of this noble composition. But it has not been without compunction that he has made this concession: for he is inclined to believe that those letters signify the words In Memoriam Scriptoris. The fact is - what has been often recognised - that this magnificent tribute to Shakespeare's worth is a sort of rival to that of Ben Jonson, thus ennobling the second folio, as Jonson's had graced the first. Now Jonson declared his poem to be In Memory of the (deceased) Author, &c.; so it is natural to look for some echo of this description in the 'rival poem: and these words might be precisely rendered by In Memoriam Scriptoris (decessi), the last word being quite unimportant. This reading leaves the field clear for conjecture on the identity of the Friendly Admirer. Apart from all attempt to fit the initials on a poet's name, only one conjecture has been made; viz., that of Boaden, in his Inquiry, 1824, p. 106. After dismissing the view that I. M. S. meant Jasper Mayne (Student), John Marston (Student, or Satirist), or John Milton (Senior), he advocates the claims of John Chapman, and makes out a plausible case for that admirable poet. A correspondent in Notes and Queries (2nd S: vii, 123) suggests J. M. (Scotus), identifying I. M. S. with the person who presented Chapman with the plate prefixed to his Iliad, and the probable author of the subscribed couplet, signed "Scotiæ Nobilis." Some time back the editor privately proposed to father this poem on Dr. John There are similarities of diction which countenance this view, and surely Donne was equal to the effort. On the other hand, it is impossible to extract from Donne's poems a piece of equal length which is not disfigured by some lines of amazing harshness; while in the poem of the Friendly Admirer there is little or no interruption to the majestic flow and delicious smoothness of the verse. Its reigning fault is a certain looseness of metaphor. It might serve to lament and praise any great dramatic poet; nothing is accurately significant of Shakespeare's peculiar genius: in this view the "curious robe" woven by the muses is an eye-sore: but the description of it is so exquisitely beautiful, that it provides the compensating eye-salve. William Godwin, (Life of E. & J. Phillips, 1815, p. 170) suggested that I. M. S. meant John Milton Senior: Mr. Collier in 1844 attributed the poem to John Milton, Student. The latter view has found an able advocate in Professor Henry Morley. But it is easily shown that the structure of the verse belongs to an earlier period than that of Milton.

The late Mr. Dyce (Ed. of Shakespeare, 1867) appears to favour the claim preferred for Jasper Mayne: but such an opinion only serves to show how little reliance can be placed upon Mr. Dyce's critical deliverances. The best of Mayne's verses, such as those pointed out by Mr. Dyce, and that praised by the late Mr. Bolton Corney (Notes and Queries, 4th S., II. 147) are merely respectable. His worst verses make us wonder what could have been the vanity that prompted them, and the flattery that praised them! Mayne might just as well have composed a poem comparable to Paradise Lost, as have written the elegy of the Friendly Admirer. But Mr. Dyce had as little sensibility to the higher graces of poetry as Samuel Johnson. Mr. Hunter's guess, that I. M. S. were the consonants of the name of some poet Fames, was the veriest trifling. If such a poet were to be discovered, the conjecture would still be out of court, for it is not a poet that we require, but a very great poet. Besides, in the editor's judgment, "The Friendly Admirer," implies that the author was an eminent rival of Shakespeare's, who bore him no envy.

A few notes on the text of this poem may be helpful. The first sixteen couplets consist of six substantive clauses (neither governed by nor governing any verb), terminated by full points, or signs of aposiopesis. These serve to convey the finest possible description of the dramatic function.

P. 121. Read:

"Make Kings his fubjects by exchanging verfe:"

i. e., by verse which effects the exchange. The last couplet on this page is echoed by Digges:

P. 122. Though "the ninefold train" is mentioned, only eight Muses seem to be specified: unless, indeed, [&]quot;Some fecond Shakespeare must of Shakespeare write."

"the melodious pair" be intended to designate Euterpe, Erato and Terpsichore. A pack of cards used to be called "a pair of cards"; and we still say "a pair of stairs": pair being a set of matched things.

Ibid: "Purléd": not purfled (i.e., embroidered, as Boaden understood by it), but rippled; the poet could not say of a picture purling. But purled seems to have had also the sense of embroidered. See Gower's Confessio Amantis and Hall's Henry VIII for examples.

P. 123, "Living drawne"—i. e., drawn as if they were substantial things.

It may be safely asserted that no English encomiastic poem has ever come near this for graceful melodious verse and mastery of language. It is, besides, so free and unstudied, that one might well believe it was written "without blot."

PAGES 124 AND 127.

Habington refers to William Prynne, the author of the Histrio-mastix of 1633, from which we have given an extract. He supposes Prynne, under the genial stimulus of his rich sack, to put off the Puritan, and to toast the prince of playwrights. This Prynne is probably the second saint described in Hudibras, Part III, C. ii, ll. 421-4 & ll. 1065-6.

There was a former Histrio-mastix, published in 1610, which is said to contain an allusion to Shake-speare's Troilus and Cressida, I, 3: but there is evidence to prove that the book had, by some years, precedence of the play. Some critics have seen in the expression "mastick jaws" an allusion by Shake-speare to the Histrio-mastix of 1610: others an allusion to Decker's Satyro-mastix. Such fancies are wholly without foundation. The word "mastick" in Troilus and Cressida means either slimy, or gnashing, in either case conveying a singularly forcible and offensive image of Thersites' jaws. "Mastick" is either from the Greek $\mu\alpha\sigma\tau i\chi\eta$, the gum of the lentisk tree, or from the Latin mastico, the equivalent of the Greek $\mu\alpha\sigma\tau\iota\chi\dot{\alpha}\omega$, from $\mu\dot{\alpha}\sigma\tau\alpha\ddot{z}$, the jaws: certainly not from mastix, which means a $\tau\upsilon hip$ or scourge.

PAGE 126.

These are the first two lines of the tenth song in Shakespeare's Passionate Pilgrim. The song is included in Percy's Reliques, Vol. III, Book ii, 16.

PAGE 130.

It is the author of this finger-counting doggrel who is credited by some with the splendid elegy on Shakespeare, which we have given on pages 120-3. We had some compunction in reproducing Mayne's trashy verses at all: but we have not reproduced the italics, which could have had no possible meaning: e.g., "Not his roome, but the Poet for thy grave." The lines on page 11 may serve, once for all, as a sample of this kind of printing. It was a fantastical trick of the time. See, for instances, Sir Roger L'Estrange's lines prefixed to Beaumont and Fletcher's Works, 1647: those of Alexander Brome on Richard Brome, in the Five New Plays, 1653: and the first edition, 1682, of Dryden's Religio Laici.

PAGE 132.

West was probably thinking of A Winter's Tale: "A sad tale's best for winter," ii, I, and "Upon a barren mountain, and still winter," iii, 2.

PAGE 133.

"Faul," for fault, occurs in The Merry Wives of Windsor, i, I. "His faul is in the 'ort dissolutely." In the mention of Jonson's command of Latin, Ramsay is probably thinking of his reflection on Shakespeare's "small Latin and less Greek."

PAGE 134.

This obscure but excellent poet writes that the tales of Chaucer heralded the rife of our Chief (Jonson), as did also the unpolished band (of poets) who succeeded him. This god-like device (the Jonsonian comedy), but little suited to (the taste of) an early age, was to be reserved for ours; and it was fitting that the gods should rehearse the contests of that age, as a preparation for so great a genius; nor will I pass over in silence the twin-bards (Beaumont and Fletcher) nor Thee Shakespeare, or whatever (other) facred (name) the plan of Fate has cast upon our times.

It was in Comedy that Jonson professed to have introduced new laws. He compliments Richard Brome, in verses prefixed to The Northern Lass, 1632 (acted in July, 1629), on the applause he had gained

"By observation of those comick laws
Which I, your master, first did teach the age."

Some years later Sir John Suckling (Sessions of the Poets) represents Ben asserting that he had purg'd the stage Of errors that had lasted many an age;

PAGE 136.

Chillingworth refers to 2 Henry IV, i, 2, where the Chief Justice's attendant says,

"I pray you Sir, then fet your knighthood and your foldierfhip aside; and give me leave to tell you, you lie in your throat," &c., to which Falstaff replies, "I give thee leave to tell me so! I lay aside that which grows to me!" &c.

PAGE 137.

The editor has not obtained a sight of this work. He gives the extract from Mr. Halliwell's Life of Shakespeare. Mr. Collier, however, quotes the passage from an edition of 1630. [8vo.] See his Biog: & Cr: Account, vol. ii, pp. 335-6.

PAGES 143 & 146.

In his first copy of verses Leonard Digges speaks twice of Shakespeare's Works. In his second he refuses that term to the plays, because it was to Shakespeare no work "to contrive a play." H. Fitzgeoffrey thus writes in his Certaine Elegies, 1620 (Book i, Sat. i.):

Bookes made of Ballades, Workes of Playes, and Sir John Suckling, in his Sessions of the Poets, writes,

The first that broke silence was good old Ben, Prepar'd before with Canary wine, And he told them plainly he deserv'd the bays, For his were call'd works, where others were but plays.

The fact is that Jonson had in 1616 issued his Plays under the title of Workes. Perhaps the joke at page 139, in the extract from Conceits, Clinches, &c., had no reference to this; the works there referred to seem to be Shakespeare's good works: still there is the same opposition to plays and books. In 1640 the second edition of Conceits, Clinches, &c., was published under the name of Jocabella, or a Cabinet of Conceits whereunto are added Epigrams and other poems. [4to.]

When Digges writes

Vermine forbeare, Least with your froth you spot them, come not neere; But if you needs must write, if poverty So pinch, that otherwise you starve and die, &c.

he is specially referring to Ben Jonson's Poetaster, where Ben says of the Marston faction,

If it gave 'em Meat, Or got 'em Clothes, 'tis well.

and there is also a remembrance of A Midsummer Night's Dream, and in particular of the words

Newts and blindworms do no wrong, Come not near our fairy queen.

Digges' verses are curious and valuable, as a testimony to the supreme popularity of Julius Casar, Othello, Henry IV, Much Ado About Nothing, and Twelfth Night. They also show that Ben Jonson had reason for viewing Shakespeare's success with jealousy. We know that his New Inn was a complete failure, as it deserved to be. We learn from Digges, that even Catiline and Sejanus were found tedious and irksome.

PAGE 149.

And VIRBIUS like: Virbius is the name borne by Hippolytus, after his revival. See Virgil's Æneid, lib. vii. Conington (1867, p. 257) thus renders the relative passage:

But Trivia kind her favourite hides, And to Egeria's care confides, To live in woods obscure and lone, And lose in Virbius' name his own.

There may be an allusion to the little volume called Jonsonns Virbius (Jonson Revived), a collection of verses in praise of Ben Jonson, published in the next year after his death, and two years before the publication of Warren's verses. The title, Jonsonus Virbius, was, according to Aubrey, given to this little work by Lord Falkland. cf., the couplet, which occur in a copy of verses by Robert Gardiner prefixed to Cartwright's works, ed. 1651.

Whose Pious Commetery shall still keep Thy Virbius waking, though thy Ashes sleep.

'Tis [Benson's] love, &c. The publisher's name has been conjecturally added, to eke out the verse, and complete the sense.

PAGE 150.

This is a creditable copy of verses, reminding one of Ben Jonson. The line

Let learned Jonson sing a Dirge for thee, proved that they were written in Jonson's lifetime: and he died 1637. The best lines in it, "Nature herself," &c., closely resemble a couplet in Ben's elegy:

Nature herself was proud of his designs, And joy'd to weare the dressing of his lines.

PAGE 153.

In the last line of the first verse, D'Avenant seems to be recalling a line in Milton's Lycidas:

And cowflips wan that hang the penfive head.

The third verse is sufficient to prove that D'Avenant had an ear.

PAGE 154.

Suckling would appear to have employed a version of Shakespeare's poem which materially differs from that known to us. Each stanza of The Rape of Lucrece, in all the old copies, has seven lines: the complete one given by Suckling has but six. But it is more likely that he curtalled and otherwise altered Shakespeare's lines. The relative stanzas ran thus in England's Parnassus, 1600 [4to], p. 460:

Her lilly hand her rose cheeke lies under, Coosning the pillow of a lawful kisse, Who, therefore angry, seemes to part in funder, Swelling on eyther side to want his blisse, Betweene whose hills her head entombed is; Where, like a vertuous monument, she lyes, To be admirde of lewd unhallowed eyes.

Without the bed, her other fayre hand was On the greene coverlet, whose perfect white Shewd like an Aprill daise on the grasse, With pearlie sweat, resembling dew of night.

It is almost impossible to date many of Suckling's pieces. Even the exact date of his death is unknown. We know, however, that he died in the year 1642. Like Raphael and Mozart, he lived but thirty-four years.

ERRATUM.

P. 110, l. 3 of extract, for "ever" read "never."

9.1

SHAKESPEARE'S CENTURIE OF PRAYSE.

THIRD PERIOD. 1642 — 1660.

1644.

ULICUS keeps to the old way of devotion, and that is the offering up the incense of so many lies and intelligence every Sunday morning: one would thinke that the Judgements which have been fent from heaven against prophanation of that day, recorded by our protomartyr, Master Burton, should be able to deterre a Diurnall maker, a paper-intelligencer, a penny worthe of newes, but the creature hath writ himfelfe into a reprobate fenfe, and you may fee how it thrives with him, for his braines have been wonderfully blafted of late, and plannet-ftrucke, and he is not now able to provoke the meanest Christian to laughter, but lies in a paire of foule fleets, a wofull spectacle and object of dullnesse, and tribulation, not to be recovered by the Protestant or Catholique liquour, either ale or strong beer, or Sack or Claret, or Hippocras, or Muscadine, or Rosasplis, which has been reputed formerly by his Grandfather Ben Johnson and his uncle Shakespeare, and his Cowzen Germains, Fletcher and Beaumont, and nofe-leffe Davenant, and Frier Sherley the Poets, the onely bloffoms for the brain, the reftoratives for the wit, the bathing for the wine muses, but none of these are now able either to warme him into a quibble, or to inflame him into a sparkle of invention, and all this because he hath prophaned the Sabbath by his pen.

Mercurius Britannicus: Numb. 20 (January 4-11, 1644). Communicating the affaires of Great Britaine: For the better Information of the People.

THOMAS PRUJEAN, 1644.

The Argument of Romeos and Juliets:

OMEO and Juliet iffues of two enimies, Montegue and Capulet, Citizens of Verona, fell in love one with the other: hee going to give her a vifit meetes Tybalt her kinfman, who urging a fight was flaine by him: for this Romeo was banished and resided at Mantua, where he received an Epistle from Juliet.

Love's Looking Glasse Divine and Humane.

[The fecond part of "Aurorata."]

(Epistles from Juliet to Romeo, and from Romeo to Juliet.) 1644. [8vo.]

[JAMES SHIRLEY], 1647.

UT directed by the example of fome, who once steered in our qualitie, and fo fortunately aspired to choose your Honour, joyned with your (now glorified) Brother, Patrons to the flowing compositions of the then expired sweet Swan of Avon Shakespeare; * * we have prefumed to offer to your Selfe, what before was never printed of these Authours.

The dedicatory epifle of ten players "to Philip Earle of Pembroke and Mountgomery." Prefixed to the first edition of Beaumont and Fletcher's Works: 1647. [Fo.]

SIR JOHN DENHAM, 1647.

HEN was wits Empire at the fatall height,

When labouring and finking with its weight,

From thence a thousand leffer Poets sprong, Like petty Princes from the Fall of Rome, When Johnson, Shakespeare, and thy selfe did sit,

And fway'd in the Triumvirate of Wit—Yet what from Johnson's oyle, and fweat did flow,

Or what more easie nature did bestow On Shakespeares gentler Muse, in thee full growne

Their Graces both appeare, yet fo, that none Can fay here Nature ends, and Art begins But mixt like th' Elements, and borne like twins,

So interweav'd, fo like, fo much the fame, None this meere Nature, that meere Art can name:

> Commendatory Verses on John Fletcher, prefixed to the first edition of Beaumont and Fletcher's Works.

JAMES HOWELL, 1647.

AD now grim BEN bin breathing, with what rage

And high-fwolne fury had he lash'd the age,

SHAKESPEARE with CHAPMAN had grown madd, and torn

Their gentle Sock, and lofty Bufkins worne, To make their Muse welter up to the chin In blood; Commendatory Verses "upon Master Fletcher's Dramatic Works." Prefixed to the first edition of Beaumont and Fletcher's Works.

SIR GEORGE BUCK, 1647.

ET Shakefpeare, Chapman, and applauded Ben,

Weare the Eternall merit of their

Pen, Here I am love-ficke: and were I to chuse, A Mistris corrivall'tis Fletcher's Muse.

Prefixed to the first edition of Beaumont and Fletcher's Works.

WILLIAM CARTWRIGHT, 1647.

WIXT Johnfon's grave, and Shakefpeare's lighter found

His Muse so steer'd that something still was sound,

Nor this, nor that, nor both, but so his owne, That'twas his marke, and he was by it knowne.

Shakefpeare to thee was dull, whose best jest lyes

I' th' Ladies questions, and the Fooles replyes; Old fashion'd wit, which walkt from town to town

In turn'd Hofe, which our fathers call'd the Clown;

Whose wit our nice times would obsceanness call,

And which made Bawdry pass for Comicall: Nature was all his Art, thy veine was free As his, but without his scurility;

"Upon the Dramatick Poems of Mr. John Fletcher:" prefixed to the first edition of Beaumont and Fletcher's Works, and included (under that title) in Cartwright's Comedies, Tragi-comedies, and Poems, 1651 [sm. 8vo], pp. 270 and 273.

J. BERKENHEAD, 1647.

HAKESPEAR was early up, and went fo dreft

As for those dawning houres he knew was best;

But when the Sun shone forth, You Two thought fit

To weare just Robes, and leave off Trunk-hofe-Wit.

* * * *

Brave Shakefpeare flow'd, yet had his Ebbings too,

Often above Himfelfe, fometimes below;
Thou Always Best; if ought feem'd to decline,
'Twas the unjudging Rout's mistake, not [mob's]
Thine:

Prefixed to the First Folio Edition of Beaumont and Fletcher's Works.

JOHN MILTON, 1645.

HEN to the well-trod stage anon,
If Jonfons learned Sock be on,
Or sweetest Shakespear fancies child, Warble his native Wood-notes wilde,

Poems. 1645. [12mo.] L'Allegro, p. 36.

JOHN MILTON, 1649.

ROM Stories of this nature both Ancient and Modern which abound, the Poets alfo, and fome English, have been in this Point fo mindful of Decorum, as to put never more pious Words in the Mouth of any Person, then of a Tyrant. shall not instance an abstruse Author, wherein the King might be less conversant, but one whom we well know was the Clofet Companion of these his Solitudes, William Shakespeare; who introduces the Person of Richard the Third, speaking, in as high a strain of Piety, and mortification, as is uttered in any paffage of this Book [Εικών Βασιλική] and fometimes to the fame fense and purpose with some words in this Place, I intended, faith he, not only to oblige my Friends, but mine Enemies. The like faith Richard, Act 2, Scen. 1.

"I do not know that English Man alive, With whom my Soul is any jot at odds, More than the Infant that is born to night; I thank my God for my Humility."

Other stuff of this fort may be read throughout the whole Tragedy, wherein the Poet us'd not much Licence in departing from the Truth of History, which delivers him a deep Diffembler, not of his affections only, but of Religion.

^{&#}x27;Εικονοκλάστης, § 1. 1690 [sm. 8vo], pp. 9-10.

J. COOKE, 1649 Circa.

AD King Charles but studied scripture half so much as Ben Jonson or Shakespeare, he would have learned that when Amaziah [&c.] [cf. 2 Kings xiv & 2 Chron. xxv.]

Appeal to all Rational Men on King Charles's Trial.

SAMUEL SHEPPARD, 1646.

EE him whose Tragic Sceans Euri-

Doth equal, and with SOPHOCLES we may

Compare great SHAKESPEARE—ARISTOPHANES Never like him, his Fancy could difplay; Witness the Prince of Tyre, his Pericles, His sweet and his to be admired lay He wrote of lustful Tarquins rape shews he Did understand the depth of Poesie.

The Times Displayed in Six Sestyads. 1646. [410.]

The fixth Seftyad: St. 9.

The fixth So peftered with mechanic flavish rimes.

Scribimus indoctique Poemata passim.

SAMUEL SHEPPARD, 1651.

To Mr. Davenport on his Play called the Pirate.

AKE all the cloth you can, haste, haste away, [Set all the canvass.] The Pirate will o'retake you if you stay:

Nay, we will yeeld our felves, and this confesse, Thou Rival'st Shakef peare, though thy glory's lesse.

Epigrams Theological, Philosophical, and Romantick. Six Books, &c. 1651. [sm. 8vo.] Book 2. Epig. 19, p. 27.

SAMUEL SHEPPARD, - 1651.

On Mr. Davenants most excellent Tragedy of Albovinek of Lombards.

> HAKESPEARES Othello, Johnfons Cataline,

Would lose the their luster, were thy

Albovine

Placed betwixt them, and as when the Sunne, Doth whirling in his fiery Chariot runne, All other lights burn dim, fo this thy play, Shall be accepted as the Sun-shine day: While other witts (like Tapers) onely feems Good in the want of thy Refulgent beames. This Tragedy (let who lift dare diffent) Shall be thy everlasting Monument.

> Epigrams Theological, Philosophical, and Romantick. Six Books, &c. 1651. sm. 8vo.] Book 4, Epig. 30, p. 98.

SAMUEL SHEPPARD, 1651.

In Memory of our Famous Shakespeare.

ı.

ACRED Spirit, while thy *Lyre*Ecchoed o're the Arcadian Plaines,

Even Apollo did admire,

Orpheus wondered at thy Straines.

2.

Plautus Sigh'd, Sophocles wept Teares of anger, for to heare After they fo long had slept, So bright a Genius should appeare:

3.

Who wrote his Lines with a Sunne-beame, More durable then Time or Fate, Others boldly do Blaspheme, Like those that seeme to Preach, but prate.

4.

Thou wert truely Priest Elect, Chosen darling to the Nine, Such a Trophey to erect (By thy wit and skill Divine). 5.

That were all their other Glories (Thine excepted) torn away, By thy admirable Stories, Their garments ever shall be gay.

6.

Where thy honoured bones do lie (As Statius once to Maro's Urne) Thither every year will I Slowly tread, and fadly mourn.

Epigrams Theological, Philosophical, and Romantick. Six Books, &c. 1651. [sm. 8vo.] Book 6, Epig. 17, pp. 150, 152, and 154.

1650 circa.

R. Ben: Johnson and Mr. Wm. Shakefpeare, Being Merrye att a Tavern Mr. Jonfon haveing begune this for his epitaph.

Here lies Ben Johnson that once was one [one's son] he gives ytt to Mr. Shakfpear to make uppe who pfently wrighte

Who while hee livede was a fhoe thing and now being dead is Nothing.

> Manuscript, vol. 38, p. 181. Ashmolean Collection. First printed in Capell's Notes on Shakespeare. i. 94.

SIR NICHOLAS L'ESTRANGE, 1650-60.

HAKE-SPEARE was Godfather to one of Ben: Johnsons children, and after the christning being in a deepe study, Johnson came to cheere him up, and askt him why he was so Melancholy? no faith Ben: (says he) not I, but I have been considering a great while what should be the sittest gift for me to bestow upon my God-child, and I have resolv'd at last; I pry'the what, sayes he? I faith Ben: I'le e'en give him a douzen good Lattin Spoones, and thou shalt translate them.

Merry Passages and Jeasts. No. 11. Harleyian Manuscripts, No. 6395. First printed in Capell's Notes on Shakespeare. i. 94.

WILLIAM BELL, 1651.

OW had we loft both Mint, and Coyn too, were

That falvage love still fashionable here,

To facrifice upon the Funerall Wood
All, the deceaf'd had e'r held deer and good?
We would bring all our fpeed to ranfome thine

With Don's rich Gold, and Johnson's filver Mine;

Then to the pile add all that Fletcher writ, Stamp'd by thy Character a currant Wit: Suckling's Ore, with Sherley's fmall mony, by Heywood's old Iron, and Shakefpear's Alchemy.

> Prefixed to Wm. Cartwright's Comedies, Tragicomedies, and Poems. (June 23) 1651. [sm. 8vo.]

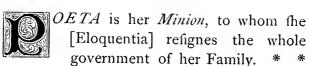

JASPER MAYNE, 1651.

OR thou to Nature had'ft joyn' Art and skill,

In Thee Ben Johnson still held Shakespear's Quill:

Prefixed to Wm. Cartwright's Comedies, Tragicomedies, and Poems. 1651. [sm. 8vo.]

1651.

Ovid the makes Major-domo. Homer because a merrie Greek, Master of the Wine-Cellars. Aretine (for his skill in Postures) growing old, is made Pander, Shack-Spear, Butler. Ben Johnson, Clark of the Kitchin, Fenner his Turn-spit, And Taylor his Scullion.

A Hermeticall Banquet, dreft by a Spagiricall Cook: for the better Prefervation of the Microcofme. 1652. [12mo.] p. 35.

JO. TATHAM, 1652.

HERE is a Faction (Friend) in Town, that cries,

Down with the Dagon-Poet, Johnson

dies.

His Works were too elaborate, not fit
To come within the Verge, or face of Wit.
Beaumont and Fletcher (they fay) perhaps, might

Passe (well) for currant Coin, in a dark night: But Shakespeare the Plebean Driller, was Founder'd in 's Pericles, and must not pass. And so, at all men slie, that have but been Thought worthy of Applause; therefore, their spleen.

Ingratefull Negro-kinde, dart you your Rage Against the Beams that warm'd you, and the Stage!

Prefixed to A Joviall Crew: or The Merry Beggars, by Richard Brome. (Prefented &c. in yeer 1641.) 1652. [4to.]

ALEXANDER BROME, 1653.

UT in Epistles of this nature, something is usually begg'd, and I would do so too, but, I vow, am puzzled, what. Tis not acceptance, for then youle expect I should give it; 'tis not Money, for then I shou'd lose my labour; 'tis not praise, for the Author bid me tell you, that now he is dead, he is of Falstass minde, and cares not for Honour; 'tis not pardon, for that supposes a fault, which (I believe) you cannot finde.

Five New Plays by Richard Brome. 1653. [4to.] (To the Readers.)

SIR ASTON COKAINE, 1653.

UDICIOUS Beaumont, and th' Ingenious Soule

Of Fletcher too may move without controule.

Shakefpeare (more rich in Humours) entertaine The crowded Theaters with his happy veine. Davenant and Maffinger, and Sherley, then Shall be cry'd up again for Famous men.

"A Preludium to Mr. RICHARD BROME'S Playes." Prefixed to Five New Playes, 1653 [4to], and included in Cokaine's Small Poems, 1658. [12mo.] Pp. 108-9.

SIR ASTON COKAINE, 1658.

OW Stratford upon Avon, we would choose

Thy gentle and ingenuous Shakefpeare Muse,

(Were he among the living yet) to raife
T' our Antiquaries merit fome just praise:
And sweet-tongu'd Drayton (that hath given renown Unto a poor (before) and obscure town, Harfull) were he not fal'n into his tombe, Would crown this work with an Encomium. Our Warwick-shire the Heart of England is, As you most evidently have prov'd by this;

Small Poems of Divers Sorts, 1658. [sm. 8vo.] To William Dugdale. p. 111-112.

SIR ASTON COKAINE, 1658.

To Mr. John Honyman.

N hopefull youth, and let thy happy ftrain

Redeem the Glory of the Stage again: Lessen the Loss of Shakes peares death by thy Successful Pen, and fortunate phantasie. He did not onely write but act; And so Thou dost not onely act, but writest too: Between you there no difference appears But what may be made up with equal years. This is my Suffrage, and I scorn my Pen Should crown the heads of undeserving men Small Poems of Divers Sorts. 1658. [sm. 8vo.] Book I, Epig. 10, p. 140-141.

SIR ASTON COKAINE, 1658.

To Mr. Clement Fisher of Wincott.

HAKESPEARE your Wincot Ale hath much renownd,

That fo'xd a Beggar fo (by chance was found

Sleeping) that there needed not many a word To make him to believe he was a Lord: But you affirm (and in it feem most eager) 'Twill make a Lord as drunk as any Beggar. Bid Norton brew fuch Ale as Shakefpeare fancies

Did put Kit Sly into fuch Lordly trances: And let us meet there (for a fit of Gladnefs) And drink our felves merry in fober fadnefs.

Small Poems of Divers Sorts. 1658. [sm. 8vo.] Book II, Epig. 69, p. 224 [mispaged 124].

SIR RICHARD BAKER, 1653.

属FTER fuch men, it might be thought ridiculous to fpeak of Stage-players; but feeing excellency in the meanest things deferve remembring, and Rofcius the Comedian is recorded in History with fuch commendation, it may be allowed us to do the like with some of our Nation. Richard Bourbidge and Edward Allen, two such Actors as no age must ever look to see the like: and, to make their Comedies compleat, Richard Tarleton, who for the Part called the Clowns Part, never had his match, never will For Writers of Playes, and such as had been Players themselves, William Shakespeare, and Benjamin Johnson, have specially left their Names recommended to posterity.

Sir Richard Bakers Chronicle. 1653. [fo.] p. 581. (Ed. 1665, p. 424.)

SIR WILLIAM DUGDALE, 1653.

HAKESPEARES and John Combes Monum^{ts}, at Stratford sup' Avon, made by one Gerard Johnfon.

Sir Wm. Dugdale's Diary. The first entry in 1653. Printed in The Life, Diary, and Correspondence of Sir Wm. Dugdale, edited by Wm. Hamper. 1827. p. 99.

1656.

On the Time-Poets.

NE night, the great Apollo, pleaf'd with Ben,

Made the odde number of the Muses ten;

The fluent Fletcher, Beaumont rich in fense, In complement and courtships quintessence; Ingenious Shakespeare; Massinger, that knowes The strength of plot to write in verse or prose, Whose easie Pegassus will amble ore Some threescore miles of fancy in an hour; Cloud-grapling Chapman, whose aerial minde Soares at philosophy, and strikes it blinde; &c.

Choyce Drollery, Songs, and Sonnets, being a collection of divers excellent pieces of poetry of feverall eminent authors, never before printed. Anon. 1656. [12mo.]

SAMUEL HOLLAND, 1656.

HE fire of emulation burnt fiercely in every angle of this paradise: The Brittish Bards (forfooth) were also ingaged in quarrel for superiority; and who think you threw the apple of difcord amongst them, but Ben Johnson, who had openly vaunted himself the first and best of English Poets: this Brave was refented by all with the highest indignation: for Chawcer (by most there) was esteemed the Father of English Poesie whose onely unhappines it was, that he was made for the time he lived in, but the time not for him: Chapman was wondroufly exasperated at Ben's boldness. and scarce refrained to tell (his own Tale of a Tub) that his Isabel and Mortimer was now compleated by a knighted poet whose foul remained in flesh: hereupon Spencer (who was very busie in finishing his Fairy Queen) thrust himself amid the throng, and was received with a flowt by Chapman, Harrington, Owen, Constable, Daniel, and Drayton, fo that fome thought the matter already decided but behold Shakefpear and Fletcher (bringing with them a strong party) appeared, as if they meant to water their bayes with blood, rather then part with their proper right, which indeed Apollo and the Muses had (with much justice) conferred upon them, so that now there is likely to be a trouble in Triplex; Skelton, Gower and the Monk of Bury were at daggers-drawing for Chawcer: Spencer waited upon by a numerous troop of the best book-men of the world: Shakespear and Fletcher surrounded with their Life-Guard viz. Gosse, Massinger, Decker, Webster, Sucklin, Cartright, Carew, &c.

Wit and Fancy in a Maze. (Don Zara del Fogo.) London. 1656. [8vo.] Book
II, chapter iv.

1658.

N D for this purpose we have here prefixt Ben Johnson's own testimony to his Servant our Author; we grant it is (according to Ben's own nature and custome) magisterial enough; and who looks for other, since he said to Shakespeare——I will draw envy on thy name (by writing in his praise) and threw in his face—fmall Latine and lefs Greek;

Five New Playes, by Richard Brome. To the Readers. 1658-9. [8vo.] (Anon.)

Thou shalt quickly do the feat,
And that so plump a thing as thou
Was never yet made up of meat.
Drink off thy Sack! 'twas onely that Made Bacchus and Jack Falstafe fatt, fatt.

A Catch: (Stanza I.) occurring on p. 72 of An Antidote against Melancholy: Made up in Pills, compounded of Witty Ballads, Jovial Songs and Merry Catches. 1661. [4to.] (The Catch anon, and of earlier date.)

Elucidations

то

THE THIRD PERIOD

OF

SHAKESPEARE'S CENTURIE OF PRAYSE.

*

ELUCIDATIONS.

--о---

PAGE 191.

The Third Period opens with a curious extract from one of the Mercuries, or Newspapers, of the Rebellion. This extract is a Puritanical attack on "the old way of devotion," viz., the publication of a Sunday Newspaper. It must be borne in mind that the Theatres were now closed by order of the Parliament, though in point of fact the prohibition had not succeeded in wholly putting down theatrical performances. Theatres had been temporarily closed in June, 1600, and again on May 10, 1836, on account of the plague. Civil war broke out in August, 1642; the first battle being fought on September 22 in that year. The first order of Parliament for closing the Theatres was dated September 2, 1642; and this being found ineffectual to suppress stage-plays, a more stringent order was promulgated in 1647, bearing date Oct. 22. The first play performed after this time was the Siege of Rhodes, fourteen years after. Our Third Period, however, is continued till the Restoration, 1660: when the floodgates of pleasure were once more opened, and the stage was deluged with theatrical licentiousness.

The "Master Burton" here referred to was the Rev. Henry Burton, the Puritan author, who suffered (with Prynne and Dr. Bastwicke) in 1636, for publishing a tract entitled "For God and the King." See A New Discovery of the Prelates Tyranny. 1641. [4to.]

Restored to liberty in 1640, he wrote his life, published in 1643. He died in 1648.

PAGE 193.

This extract and those on pp. 48, 111, and 225 I have derived from Mr. Collier's Biog. and Cr. Account of Rare Books. 1865.

PAGE 194.

Shirley here adopts Ben Jonson's graceful sobriquet for Shakespeare: "Sweet Swan of Avon" (p. 101).

PAGE 198.

Canon Kingsley calls Cartwright a "wondrous youth." (Essays. 1872. p. 58.) The fact is, he was not a good poet; but for his manifold and precocious accomplishments he might have been nicknamed Drusus, and in one respect the name would have fitted him better than it did Shakespeare, for Cartwright died young. Like Jaspar Mayne, he was a dramatist in Holy Orders; but he wrote twice as many plays as Mayne: viz., four.

PAGE 201.

In the editor's judgment Malone was in error in taking these remarks to imply a rebuke to Charles I for making Shakespeare his closet-companion. Milton merely takes a book which he knew was a favourite with the king, and out of it reads him a lesson. Apart from the single word "stuff," there is nothing like disparagement of Shakespeare in his remarks; and the contemptuous use of that word is the growth of a later age. Milton uses it also in the Introduction to Samson Agonistes, 1671. Having alluded to a tragedy named Christ Suffering, attributed to St. Gregory Nazianzen, Milton writes,

This is mention'd to vindicate Tragedy from the small esteem, or rather infamy, which in the account of many it undergoes at this day with other common Interludes; hap'ning through the Poets error of intermixing Comic stuff with Tragic sadness and gravity; or introducing trivial and vulgar persons, which by all judicious hath bin counted absurd; and brought in without discretion, corruptly to gratise the people.

Of that fort of Dramatic Poem which is call'd Tragedy.

It can hardly be pretended that "stuff" is here used as antithetic to "sadness" or "gravity."

PAGE 206.

The first line of the second verse almost requires us to read "Sophócles." The lyric, as a whole, is very weak: but it has one good line—the last.

PAGE 208.

Mr. Halliwell, after Capell, misprints "slow thing" for "shoe thing": shoe is the early orthography of show (see ante, p. 16). "A shoe thing" meant a player (q. d. a poor thing that lives by show). According to this view "shoe thing" (show-thing), like "Shake-scene," is a neologism, and a term of reproach and contempt. Both coinages, then, bear witness to the low estate of the actor before the Restoration. John Davies' Microcosmos (from which we have given an extract on p. 42) was published in the same year as the first quarto edition of Hamlet, when, one may suppose, the player was at his lowest. Davies thus comments on the mixture of pride and baseness exhibited in such an one—

Good God! that ever pride should stoop so low, That is by nature so exceeding hie:
Base pride, didst thou thy selfe, or others know, Wouldst thou in harts of Apish Actors lie,
That for a Cue wil sel their Qualitie?
Yet they through thy persuasion (being strong)
Doe weene they merit immortality,

Onely because (forsooth) they use their Tongue, To speake as they are taught, or right or wronge.

If pride ascende the slage (ô base ascent)
Al men may see her, for nought comes thereon
But to be seene, and where Vice should be shent,
Yea, made most odious to ev'ry one,
In blazing her by demonstration
Then pride that is more than most vicious,
Should there endure open damnation,
And so shee doth, for shee's most odious
In Men most base, that are ambitious.

Microcosmos, &c. 1603. [4to.] Sig. Ff 3. pp. 214-5.

Mr. Halliwell writes,

"The conclusion of the first line of the epitaph should probably be 'that was one's fon,' for in an early MS. common-place book I have seen the following lines:—

B. Johnson in feipfum,— Heere lies Johnson,
Who was one's sonne:
Hee had a little hayre on his chin,
His name was Benjamin!"

Life of Shakespeare. 1848. p. 186.

PAGE 209.

It has been inferred from L'Estrange's note on this anecdote that he had derived it from Dr. John Donne. At the end of this first book is a list of authorities for 603 of the anecdotes, there being a few additional ones without any authorities: this list is at foot of fol. 89-91 b. In this we find that No. 4 is referred to "Mr. Dunn," Nos. 11 and 12 to "Mr. Dun:" (where the: is doubtless—as in all other cases—a sign of abbreviation); Nos. 26, 56, and others to "Mr. Donne." One of the authorities is Captain Duncombe: whence it would appear that "Dun:" may be an abbreviation of Duncombe. Dr. John Donne is not mentioned at all.

PAGE 212.

Here are associated, Shakespeare, Ben Jonson, Fennor, and John Taylor. In Certaine Elegies, &c., by H. Fitzgeoffrey, 1620, we have

Taylor the Ferriman, Fennor with his Unisounding eare word; whatever that may mean. (Collier's Hist. of Dramat. Poetry. iii. 388.) The association of Taylor and Fennor was due to their wit-combats in 1614. See, A cast over the Water to William Fennor. Taylor's Works. 1630. [Fo.]

PAGE 213.

Of course it is the faction opposed to Tatham who thus denounces Jonson, Beaumont, Fletcher, and Shakespeare. As to Shakespeare being "founder'd in's Pericles," the libel is disproved by the extract from Pimlyco and that from The Hog hath lost his Pearl (pp. 58 and 64). But Owen Feltham's testimony (p. 118) may be taken for the fact that the Gower interlude and the brothel-scenes in Pericles had scandalised, and caused "deep displeasure" to, the friends of public morality.

PAGE 218.

Cokaine alludes, of course, to the Induction of The Taming of the Shrew: naturally so, if, as appears, the scene of that is Wincot, or Wilnecote. See Sly's third speech, Induction: sc. 2.

PAGE 220.

For an account of Shakespeare's monument and tombstone, with plates, see Dugdale's Antiquities of Warwickshire.

Mr. Hamper, in a Note to Dugdale's Diary, &c., refers to "a notice of this sculptor (Gerard Johnson) in the Certificate of Foreigners in London, A.D. 1593: printed in Appendix II."

In Dugdale's collection of monumental inscriptions: Salop: [1663] he calls Shakespeare "the late famous Tragedian."

PAGE 221.

The lines 5—8 are quoted by Gerard Langbaine (s. n. Massinger) in his Account of the English Dramatick Poets, 1691; where they are assigned to "an old poet": so he knew no more than we who was the author of the poem. His version has "ramble" for amble; an error which we conjecturally set right, before we had collated it with the text reprinted in the Shakespeare Society's Papers, vol. iii, p. 172. It is in this piece that we meet with a couplet on Ben Jonson's servant and collaborateur, Richard Brome, or Broom, which in another form did duty for W. Broome, Pope's assistant. Here we have,

Sent by Ben Johnson, as some authors say, Broom went before, and kindly swept the way;

which a century later assumed this form:

Pope came off clean with Homer; but they fay, Broome went before, and kindly fwept the way.

I. D'Israeli supposed this epigram to be borrowed from a line in Owen Feltham's Ode, "Ben, do not leave the stage," &c., st. iv, l. 4.

PAGE 222.

The scene of this strange romance is laid in Elysium, where the poets take sides with Chaucer, Spenser, Shakespeare and Fletcher, against the arrogant self-assertion of Ben Jonson.

PAGE 224.

See our remarks on p. 170. Perhaps, however, this writer takes Jonson to mean,

I am so ample to your book and same, that I may make others envious of you, for the honour of my encomium, who am usually so sparing of praise: but I do not write with that object.

SHAK-ESPEARE'S CENTURIE OF PRAYSE.

FOURTH PERIOD. 1660 — 1693.

RICHARD FLECKNOE, 1660. Circu.

N this time were Poets and Actors in their greatest flourish, Johnson, Shakespear, with Beaumont and Fletcher, their Poets, and Field and Burbidge their Actors.

For Playes Shakespear was one of the first who invented the Dramatick Stile, from dull History to quick Comedy, upon whom Johnson refin'd, as Beaumont and Fletcher first writ in the Heroick way, upon whom Suckling and others endeavoured to refine agen; one faying wittily of his Aglaurs, that 'twas full of fine flowers, but they seem'd rather stuck, then growing there; as another of Shakespear's writings, that 'twas a fine Garden, but it wanted weeding.

* * * * * *

To compare our English Dramatick Poets together (without taxing them) Shakespear excelled in a natural Vein, Fletcher in Wit, and Johnson in Gravity and ponderousness of Style; whose onely fault was, he was too elaborate; and had he mixt less erudition with his Playes, they had been more pleasant and delightful then they are. Comparing him with Shakespear, you shall see the difference betwixt Nature and Art; and with Fletcher, the difference between Wit and Judgement: Wit being an exuberant thing, like Nilus, never more commendable than when it overflowes; but Judgement a stayed and reposed thing, alwayes containing it self within its bounds and limits.

A Discourse of the English Stage, by Richard Flecknoe. Attached to "Love's Kingdom, a Pastoral Tragi-Comedy." 1664. [8vo.]

JOHN WARD, 1662.

SHAKSPEARE.

HAKSPEAR had but two daughters, one whereof Mr. Hall, the physitian, married, and by her had one daughter married, to wit, the Lady Bernard of Abbingdon.

I have heard that Mr. Shakfpeare was a natural wit, without any art at all; hee frequented the plays all his younger time, but in his elder days lived at Stratford, and fupplied the stage with two plays every year, and for itt had an allowance fo large, that hee spent att the rate of 1,000l. a-year, as I have heard.

Shakespeare, Drayton, and Ben Jonson, had a merie meeting, and itt feems drank too hard, for Shakespear died of a feavour there contracted.

Remember to perufe Shakespeare's plays, and bee much verfed in them, that I may not bee ignorant in that matter.

Whether Dr. Heylin does well, in reckoning up the dramatick poets which have been famous in England, to omit Shakespeare.

A letter to my brother, to fee Mrs. Queeny, to fend for Tom Smith for the acknowledgment.

> Diary of the Rev. John Ward, A.M., Vicar of Stratford-upon-Avon, extending from 1648 to 1679. 1839. p. 183-4.

SAMUEL PEPYS, 1660—1669.

1660.

CTOBER 11.—Here, in the Park, we met with Mr. Salifbury, who took Mr. Creed and me to the Cockpitt to fee "The Moore of Venice," which was well done. Burt acted the Moore; by the fame token, a very pretty lady that fat by me, called out, to fee Desdemona smothered.

1661-2.

March 1.—To the Opera, and there faw "Romeo and Juliet," the first time it was ever acted, [but it is a play of itself the worst that ever I heard, and the worst acted that ever I saw these people do, and] I am resolved to go no more to see the first time of acting, for they were all of them out more or less.

1662.

September 29.—To the King's Theatre, where we faw "Midsummer's Night's dream," which I had never seen before, nor shall ever again, for it is the most insipid ridiculous play that ever I saw in my life.

[1662-3.

January 6.—To the Duke's House, and there saw Twelfth-Night acted well, though it be but a filly play, and not relating at all to the name or day.]

1663.

May 28.—By water to the Royall Theatre; but that was fo full they told us we could have no room. And fo to the Duke's house; and there saw "Hamlett" done, giving us fresh reason never to think enough of Betterton.

December 10. — To St. Paul's Church Yard, to my bookfeller's, and could not tell whether to lay out my money for books of pleafure, as plays, which my nature was most earnest in; but at last, after seeing Chaucer, Dugdale's History of Paul's, Stow's London, Gesner, History of Trent, besides Shakespeare, Jonson, and Beaumont's plays, I at last chose Dr. Fuller's Worthys, the Cabbala or Collections of Letters of State, and a little book, Delices de Hollande, with another little book or two, all of good use or serious pleasure; and Hudibras, both parts, the book now in greatest fashion for drollery, though I cannot, I consess, see enough where the wit lies.

1663-4.

January 1.—Went to the Duke's house, the first play I have been at these six months, according to my last vowe, and here saw the so much cried-up play of "Henry the Eighth;"

which, though I went with refolution to like it, is fo fimple a thing made up of a great many patches, that, befides the shows and processions in it, there is nothing in the world good or well done.

1664.

November 5.—To the Duke's house to see "Macbeth," a pretty good play, but admirably acted.

1666.

August 20.—To Deptford by water, reading Othello, Moore of Venice, which I ever heretofore esteemed a mighty good play, but having so lately read The Adventures of Five Houres, it seems a mean thing.

August 29.—To St. James's, and there Sir W. Coventry took Sir W. Pen and me apart, and read to us his answer to the Generall's letter to the King, that he read last night; * * * * And then, speaking of the supplies which have been made to this fleet, more than ever in all kinds to any, even that wherein the Duke of York himself was, "Well," says he, "if this will not do, I will say, as Sir J. Falstaffe did to the Prince, 'Tell your father, that if he do not like this, let him kill the next Piercy himself.'"

December 28.—I to my Lord Crewe's, *

* * From hence to the Duke's house, and there saw "Macbeth" most excellently acted, and a most excellent play for variety. I had fent for my wife to meet me there, who did come: fo I did not go to White Hall, and got my Lord Bellasses to get me into the playhouse; and there, after all staying above an hour for the players (the King and all waiting, which was abfurd,) faw "Henry the Fifth" well done by the Duke's people, and in most excellent habit, all new vests, being put on but this night. But I fat fo high and far off that I missed most of the words, and fat with a wind coming into my back and neck, which did much trouble me. The play continued till twelve at night; and then up, and a most horrid cold night it was, and frosty, and moonshine.

1666-7.

January 7.—To the Duke's house, and saw "Macbeth," which though I saw it lately, yet appears a most excellent play in all respects, but especially in divertisement, though it be a deep tragedy; which is a strange perfection in a tragedy, it being most proper here, and suitable.

1667.

August 15.—Sir W. Pen and I to the Duke's house; where a new play. The King and Court there: the house full, and an act begun. And so we went to the King's, and there saw "The Merry Wives of Windsor;" which did not please me at all, in no part of it.

October 16. — To the Duke of York's house; and I was vexed to see Young (who is but a bad actor at best) act Macbeth, in the room of Betterton, who, poor man! is sick: [but Lord! what a prejudice it wrought in me against the whole play, and every body else agreed in disliking this fellow. Thence home, and there find my wife gone home; because of this fellow's acting of the part, she went out of the house again.]

November 2.—To the King's playhouse, and there saw "Henry the Fourth;" and, contrary to expectation, was pleased in nothing more than in Cartwright's speaking of Falstaffe's speech about "What is Honour?"

[November 6. — With my wife to a play, and the girl — "Macbeth," which we still like mightily, though mighty short of the content we used to have when Betterton acted, who is still sick.]

November 7.—At noon refolved with Sir W. Pen to go to fee "The Tempest," an old play of Shakespeare's, acted, I hear, the first day. * The house mighty full; the King and Court there: and the most innocent play that ever I saw; and a curious piece of musique in an echo of half sentences, the echo repeating the former half, while the man goes on to the latter; which is mighty pretty. The play has no great wit, but yet above ordinary plays.

1668.

[August 12.—After dinner, I and wife, and Mercer, and Deb., to the Duke of York's house, and saw "Macbeth," to our great content, and then home, where the women went to the making of my tubes.]

August 31.—To the Duke of York's play-house, and saw "Hamlet," which we have not seen this year before, or more; and mightily pleased with it, but above all with Betterton, the best part, I believe, that ever man acted.

December 21.—Went into Holborne, and there faw the woman that is to be feen with a beard. * * * Thence to the Duke's playhouse, and saw "Macbeth."

1668-g.

February 6.—To the King's playhouse, and there in an upper box * * * did see "The Moor of Venice:" but ill acted in most parts, Moone (which did a little surprize me) not acting Iago's part by much so well as Clun used to do: nor another Hart's, which was Cassio's; nor indeed Burt doing the Moor's so well as I once thought he did.

Memoirs of Samuel Pepys, Efq., F.R.S. Comprising his Diary from 1659 to 1669, &c. Edited by Richard Lord Braybrooke, 2 vols. 1825. [410.]

JOHN EVELYN, 1661.

OVEMBER 26.—I faw Hamlet Prince of Denmark played, but now the old plays began to difgust this refined age, since his Majesties being so long abroad.

Kalendarium (or Diary). Memoirs: Edited by William Bray. 1819. [8vo.] Vol. 2, p. 342.

JOHN EVELYN, 1689.

UGUST 12. — For there were the Pictures of Fisher, Fox, S^r Thomas More, Tho. Lord Cromwell, Dr.

Nowell, &c. And what was most agreeable to his Lops general humour, Old Chaucer, Shakspere, Beaumont and Fletcher, who were both in one piece, Spencer, Mr. Waller, Cowley, Hudibras, which last he plac'd in the roome where he us'd to eate & dine in publiq, most of which, if not all, are at the present at Cornebury, in Oxfordshire;

Letter "To Mr. Pepys," deferibing the then late Lord Clarendon's house, Memoirs: Edited by William Bray. 1819. [8vo.] Vol. 2, p. 242.

THOMAS JORDAN, 1664.

HE word was brought unto the Duke

His wife was newly dead,

And that her last words were (her eyes waxing dim)

Commend me to the Duke, I ne'er knew any man but him.

A Royal Arbor of Loyal Poesse. 1664. [4to.]
Reprint edited by J. P. Collier. p. 124.
The Jealous Duke and the Injur'd Dutches;
A Story. Tune, The Dream. End of St. 4.

MARGARET CAVENDISH, 1664.

WONDER how that person you mention in your letter, could either have the conscience, or considence to difpraise Shakespear's playes, as to say they were made up onely with clowns, fools, watchmen, and the like; but to answer that person, though Shakefpear's wit will answer for himfelf, I fay, that it feems by his judging, or cenfuring, he understands not playes, or wit; for to express properly, rightly, usually, and naturally, a clown's, or fool's humour, expresfions, phrafes, garbs, manners, actions, words, and course of life, is as witty, wife, judicious, ingenious, and observing, as to write and express the expressions, phrases, garbs, manners, actions, words, and course of life, of kings and princes; and to express naturally, to the life, a mean country wench, as a great lady, a courtesan, as a chaste woman, a mad man, as a man in his right reason and senses, a drunkard, as a fober man, a knave, as an honest man, and fo a clown, as a well-bred man, and a fool, as a wife man; nay, it expresses and declares a greater wit, to express, and deliver to posterity, the extravagances of madness.

the fubtilty of knaves, the ignorance of clowns, and the simplicity of naturals, or the craft of feigned fools, than to express regularities, plain honesty, courtly garbs, or fensible discourses, for 'tis harder to express nonsense than fenfe, and ordinary conversations, than that which is unufual; and 'tis harder, and requires more wit to express a jester, than a grave statesman; yet Shakespear did not want wit, to express to the life all forts of persons, of what quality, profession, degree, breeding, or birth foever; nor did he want wit to express the divers and different humours, or natures, or feveral passions in mankind; and fo well he hath express'd in his playes all forts of perfons, as one would think he had been transformed into every one of those persons he hath described; and as fometimes one would think he was really himself the clown or jester he seigns, so one would think, he was also the king, and privycouncillor; also as one would think he were really the coward he feigns, fo one would think he were really the most valiant and experienced fouldier; Who would not think he had been fuch a man as Sir, John Falstaff? and who would not think he had been Harry the Fifth? & certainly Julius Cæfar, Augustus [Octavius] Cæfar, and Antonius, did never really act their parts better, if so well, as he hath described them, and I believe that Antonius and

Brutus did not speak better to the people, than he had feign'd them; nay, one would think that he had been metamorphofed from a man to a woman, for who could describe Cleopatra better than he has done, and many other females of his own creating, as Nan Page, Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, the doctors maid, Bettrice, Mrs. Quickly, Doll Tearsheet, and others, too many to relate? and in his tragick vein, he prefents passions so naturally, and misfortunes fo probably, as he peirces the fouls of his readers with fuch a true fense and feeling thereof, that it forces tears through their eyes, and almost perfuades them, they are really actors, or at least present at those tragedies. Who could not fwear he had been a noble lover, that could woo fo well? and there is not any person he hath described in his book, but his readers might think they were well acquainted with them; indeed Shakespear had a clear judgment, a quick wit, a fpreading fancy, a fubtil observation, a deep apprehension, and a most eloquent elocution; truly, he was a natural orator, as well as a natural poet, and he was not an orator to fpeak well only on fome fubjects, as lawyers, who can make eloquent orations at the bar, and plead fubtilly and wittily in law-cases, or divines, that can preach eloquent fermons, or dispute subtilly and wittily in theology, but take them from that, and put them to other fubjects, and they will be to feek; but Shake-fpear's wit and eloquence was general, for and upon all fubjects, he rather wanted fubjects for his wit and eloquence to work on, for which he was forced to take fome of his plots out of history, where he only took the bare defigns, the wit and language being all his own; &c.

Remember, when we were very young maids, one day we were discoursing about lovers, and we did injoyn each other to confefs who profefs'd to love us, and whom we loved, and I confess'd I only was in Love with three dead men, which were dead long before my time, the one was Cæfar, for his valour, the fecond Ovid, for his wit, and the third was our countryman Shakespear, for his comical and tragical humour; but foon after we both married two worthy men, and I will leave you to your own husband, for you best know what he is; As for my husband, I know him to have the valour of Cæfar, the fancy, and wit of Ovid, and the tragical, especially comical art of Shakespear; in truth he is as far beyond Shakefpear for comical humour, as Shakespear beyond an ordinary poet in that way; &c.

> CCXI Sociable Letters of the Duchefs of Newcaftle, 1664. [Fo.] Letters CXXIII and CLXII.

JOHN DRYDEN, 1668.

O begin, then, with Shakespeare: he was the man who of all modern, and perhaps ancient poets, had the largest and most comprehensive soul. images of nature were still present to him, and he drew them not laboriously, but luckily: when he describes any thing, you more than fee it, you feel it too. Those who accuse him to have wanted learning, give him the greater commendation: he was naturally learned; he needed not the spectacles of books to read nature; he looked inwards, and found her I cannot fay he is everywhere alike; were he fo, I should do him injury to compare him with the greatest of mankind. He is many times flat, infipid; his comic wit degenerating into clenches, his ferious swelling into bombast. But he is always great when fome great occafion is prefented to him: no man can fay he ever had a fit subject for his wit, and did not then raife himfelf as high above the rest of the poets,

Quantum lenta folent, inter viburna cupressi.

Of dramatick poefic, an effay. 1668. [4to]

JOHN DRYDEN, 1669.

S, when a Tree's cut down, the fecret Root

Lives under ground, and thence new branches shoot;

So, from old Shakespear's honour'd dust, this day

Springs up and buds a new reviving play.

Shakefpear, who (taught by none) did first impart

To Fletcher wit, to labouring Johnson Art. He Monarch-like, gave those his subjects Law, And is that Nature that they paint and draw. Fletcher reach'd that which on his heights did grow,

Whilst Johnson crept and gathered all below. This did his Love, and this his Mirth digest: One imitates him most, the other best.

If they have fince out-writ all other Men, 'Tis with the drops which fell from Shake-fpear's pen.

The Storm which vanish'd on the neighb'ring shore,

Was taught by Shakespear's Tempest first to roar.

That Innocence and Beauty which did smile In Fletcher, grew on this Enchanted Isle.

But Shakefpear's Magic could not copy'd be, Within that Circle none durst walk but he. I must confess 'twas bold, nor would you now That liberty to vulgar wits allow, Which works by Magic supernatural things: But Shakespear's power is Sacred as a King's. Those Legends from old Priesthood were receiv'd,

And he then writ, as People then believ'd.

Prologue to The Tempest or The Enchanted Island, by Sir William D'Avenant and John Dryden. 1669.

[JOHN DRYDEN] 1672.

N country beauties as we often fee Something that takes in their simplicity,

Yet while they charm they know not they are fair,

And take without their spreading of the snare— Such artless beauty lies in Shakespear's wit; 'Twas well in spite of him whate'er he writ. His excellencies came, and were not fought, His words like cafual atoms made a thought; Drew up themselves in rank and file, and writ, He wondering how the devil it were, such wit. Thus, like the drunken tinker in his play, He grew a prince, and never knew which way. He did not know what trope or figure meant, But to perfuade is to be eloquent; So in this Cæfar which this day you fee, Tully ne'er spoke as he makes Anthony. Those then that tax his learning are to blame, He knew the thing, but did not know its name; Great Johnson did that ignorance adore, And though he envied much, admir'd him more. The faultless Johnson equally writ well; Shakespear made faults-but then did more excel.

One close at guard like some old sencer lay, T'other more open, but he shew'd more play. In imitation Johnson's wit was shown, Heaven made his men, but Shakespear made his own.

Wife Johnson's talent in observing lay,
But others' follies still made up his play.
He drew the like in each elaborate line,
But Shakespear like a master did design.
Johnson with skill dissected human kind,
And shew'd their faults, that they their faults might find;

But then, as all anatomifts must do,
He to the meanest of mankind did go,
And took from gibbets such as he would show.
Both are so great, that he must boldly dare
Who both of them does judge, and both compare;

If amongst poets one more bold there be, The man that dare attempt in either way, is he.

Prologue to Julius Casar, by Sir William D'Avenant and John Dryden. Covent Garden drolery. 1672. [8vo.] p. 9.

JOHN DRYDEN, 1673.

O begin with Language. That an alteration is lately made in ours, or fince the writers of the last age (in which I comprehend Shakespeare, Fletcher, and Jonson,) is manifest. Any man who reads those excellent poets, and compares their language with what is now written, will fee it almost in every line; but that this is an improvement of the language, or an alteration for the better, will not fo eafily be granted. One testimony of this is undeniable, that we are the first who have observed them [their improprieties of language]; and certainly to observe errors is a great step to the correcting of them. But, malice and partiality fet apart, let any man, who understands English, read diligently the works of Shakespeare and Fletcher, and I dare undertake, that he will find in every page either fome folecism of speech, or some notorious flaw in fense; and yet these men are reverenced, when we are not forgiven. That their wit is great, and many times their expressions noble, envy itself cannot deny.

> Neque ego illis detrahere aufim Hærentem capiti multâ cum laude coronam.

but the times were ignorant in which they liv'd. Poetry was then, if not in its infancy among us, at least not arriv'd to its vigor and maturity: witness the lameness of their plots: many of which, especially those which they writ first, (for even that age refin'd itself in some measure,) were made up of some ridiculous incoherent flory, which in one play many times took up the business of an age. I suppose I need not name Pericles, Prince of Tyre, nor the historical plays of Shakespeare: besides many of the rest, as the Winter's Tale, Love's labour loft, Meafure for Meafure, which were either grounded on impossibilities, or at least so meanly written, that the comedy neither caused your mirth, nor the ferious part your concernment.

In reading some bombast speeches of Mac-beth, which are not to be understood, he [Johnson] used to say that it was horrour. and I am much afraid that this is so.

But I am willing to close the book [Catiline], partly out of veneration to the author, partly out of weariness to pursue an argument which is so fruitful in so small a compass. And what correctness, after this, can be expected from Shakespear or from Fletcher, who wanted that learning and care which Johnson had? I will therefore spare my own trouble of enquiring into their faults: who had they liv'd now, had doubtless written more correctly.

* * * *

By this graffing, as I may call it, on old words, has our tongue been beautified by the three fore-mentioned poets, Shakefpear, Fletcher, and Johnfon: whose excellencies I can never enough admire, and in this they have been follow'd, especially by Sir John Suckling and Mr. Waller, who refin'd upon them.

* * * *

I should now speak of the refinement of wit: but I have been fo large on the former fubject that I am forc'd to contract myfelf in I will therefore onely observe to you. that the wit of the last age was yet more incorrect than their language. Shakespear, If who many times has written better than any poet, in any language, is yet fo far from writing wit always, or expressing that wit according to the dignity of the fubject, that he writes, in many places, below—the dullest writer of ours, or any precedent age. Never did any author precipitate himself from such heights of thought to fo low expressions, as he often does. He is the very Janus of poets; he wears almost everywhere two faces: and you have fcarce begun to admire the one, e're you despife the other. Neither is the luxuriance of Fletcher, (which his friends have taxed in him,) a less fault than the carelessness of Shakespear.

* * * *

Shakespear show'd the best of his skill in his Mercutio, and he said himself, that he was forc'd to kill him in the third Act, to prevent being kill'd by him. But, for my part, I cannot find he was so dangerous a person: I see nothing in him but what was so exceeding harmless, that he might have liv'd to the end of the play, and dy'd in his bed, without offence to any man.

* * *

Let us therefore admire the beauties and the heights of Shakefpear, without falling after him into a careleffness, and (as I may call it) a lethargy of thought for whole scenes together.

Defence of the Epilogue (appended to the fecond part of Almanzor and Almahide, or the Conquest of Granada. By John Dryden.

1672.)

JOHN DRYDEN, 1674.

ITH joy we bring what our dead authors writ,

And beg from you the value of their wit;

That Shakespeare's Fletcher's and great Jonfon's claim,

May be renew'd from those who gave them fame.

Prologue to the University of Oxford. Prologue and Epilogues. 1779.

JOHN DRYDEN, 1677.

OUR Ben and Fletcher, in their first young flight,

Did no Volpone, nor no Arbaces

write,

But hopped about and short excursions made From bough to bough, as if they were asraid, And each was guilty of some Slighted Maid. Shakespeare's own muse her Pericles sirst bore; The Prince of Tyre was elder than the Moor. 'Tis miracle to see a first good play; All hawthorns do not bloom on Christmas-day. A slender poet must have time to grow, And spread and burnish as his brothers do. Who still looks lean, sure with some pox is curst,

But no man can be Falstaff-fat at first.

Prologue to Circe, by Charles Davenant. [IVritten in 1675] 1677. [4to.]

JOHN DRYDEN, 1678.

N my Stile I have profess'd to imitate the Divine Shakespeare; which that I might perform more freely, I have dis-incumber'd my felf from Rhyme. I hope I need not to explain my felf, that I have not Copy'd my Author servilely: Words and Phrases must of necessity receive a change in succeeding Ages: but 'tis almost a Miracle that much of his Language remains so pure; and that he who began Dramatique Poetry amongst us, untaught by any, and, as Ben Johnson tells us, without Learning, should by the force of his own Genius perform so much, that in a manner he has left no praise for any who come after him.

Preface to All for Love; or, the World well Loft. 1678. [4to.]

JOHN DRYDEN, 1679.

HE Poet Æfchylus was held in the same veneration by the Athenians of after Ages as Shakespear is by though the difficulties of altering are greater, and our reverence for Shakespear much more just, then that of the Grecians for Æschylus, * * must be allow'd to the present Age, that the tongue in general is so much refin'd since Shakespear's time, that many of his words, and more of his Phrases, are scarce intelligible. And of those which we understand fome are ungrammatical, others courfe; and his whole stile is so pester'd with Figurative expressions, that it is as affected as it is obscure. 'T is true, that in his later Plays he had worn off fomewhat of the rust; but the Tragedy which I have undertaken to correct, was, in all probability, one of his first endeavours on the Stage.

Leoarse

Shakefpeare, (as I hinted) in the Aprenticefhip of his Writing, model'd it into that Play, which is now call'd by the name of Troilus and Creffida; but so lamely is it left to us, that it is not divided into Acts: which fault

[Chaucer's story]

I ascribe to the Actors, who Printed it after Shakefpear's death; and that too, so carelesly, that a more uncorrect Copy I never faw. For the Play it felf, the Author feems to have begun it with fome fire; the Characters of Pandarus and Thersites, are promising enough; but as if he grew weary of his task, after an Entrance or two, he lets 'em fall: and the later part of the Tragedy is nothing but a confusion of Drums and Trumpets, Excursions and Alarms. The chief perfons, who give name to the Tragedy, are left alive: Creffida is false, and is not punished. Yet after all, because the Play was Shakespear's, and that there appear'd in some places of it, the admirable Genius of the Author; I undertook to remove that heap of Rubbish, under which many excellent thoughts lay wholly bury'd.

I will not weary my Reader with the Scenes which are added [&c.]: but I cannot omit the last Scene in it, which is almost half the Act, betwixt Troilus and Heclor. The occasion of raising it was hinted to me by Mr. Betterton: the contrivance and working of it was my own. They who think to do me an injury, by saying that it is an imitation of the Scene betwixt Brutus and Cassius, do me an honour, by supposing I could imitate the incomparable Shakespear: but let me add, that if Shakespears Scene, or that faulty copy of it in Amintor and Melantius had never been, yet Euripides had furnish'd me with an excellent example in his Ipigenia, between Agamemnon and Menelaus: and from thence indeed, the last turn of it is borrow'd. The occasion which Shakespear, Euripides, and Fletcher, have all taken, is the fame; grounded upon Friendship: and the quarrel of two virtuous men, raifed by natural degrees, to the extremity of passion, is conducted in all three, to the declination of the same passion; and concludes with a warm renewing of their Friendship. But the particular ground-work which Shakespear has taken, is incomparably the best: Because he has not only chosen two the greatest Heroes of their Age; but has likewise interested the Liberty of Rome, and their own honors, who were the redeemers of it, in this debate. And if he has made Brutus, who was naturally a patient man, to fly into excess at first; let it be remembered in his defence, that just before, he has received the news of Portia's death, whom the Poet on purpose neglecting a little Chronology, supposes to have dy'd before Brutus, only to give him an occasion of being more eafily exasperated. Add to this, that the injury he had received from Caffius, had long been brooding in his mind; and that a melancholy man, upon confideration of an affront, especially from a Friend, would be more eager in his paffion, than he who had given it, though naturally more cholerick.

How defective Shakefpear and Fletcher have been in all their Plots, Mr. Rymer has discover'd in his Criticisms: * * *

The difference between Shakespear and Fletcher in their Plottings seems to be this; that Shakespear generally moves more terror, and Fletcher more compassion: For the first had a more Masculine, a bolder and more siery Genius; the Second a more soft and Womanish. In the mechanic beauties of the Plot, which are the Observation of the three Unities, Time, Place, and Action, they are both deficient; but Shakespear most. Ben Johnson reform'd those errors in his Comedies, yet one of Shakespear's was Regular before him: which is, The Merry Wives of Windsor. For what remains concerning the design, you are to be refer'd to our English Critic.

* * * *

A character, or that which diftinguishes one man from all others, cannot be suppos'd to confist of one particular virtue, or vice, or passion only; but 't is a composition of qualities which are not contrary to one another in the same person: thus the same man may be liberal and valiant, but not liberal and covetous; so in a Comical character, or humour, (which is an inclination to this, or that, folly) Falflaff is a lyar, and a coward, a Glutton, and a Buffon, because all these qualities may agree in the same man;

* * * *

To return once more to Shakefpear; no man ever drew fo many characters, or generally distinguished 'em better from one another, excepting only Johnson: I will instance but in one, to fhow the copiousness of his Invention; 't is that of Calyban, or the Monster in the Tempest. He seems to have created a perfon which was not in Nature, a boldness which at first fight would appear intolerable: for he makes him a Species of himself, begotten by an Incubus on a Witch; but this as I have elfewhere prov'd, is not wholly beyond the bounds of credibility, as least the vulgar still believe it. We have the separated notions of a spirit, and of a Witch; (and Spirits according to Plato, are vested with a subtil body; according to fome of his followers, have different Sexes) therefore as from the diffinct apprehensions of a Horse, and of a Man, Imagination has form'd a Centaur, fo from those of an Incubus and a Sorcerefs, Shakefpear has produc'd his Monster. Whether or no his Generation can be defended, I leave to Philosophy; but of this I am certain, that the Poet has most judiciously furnished him with a person, a Language, and a character, which will fuit him, both by Fathers and Mothers 12 wells fide: he has all the discontents, and malice of a Witch, and of a Devil; besides a convenient proportion of the deadly fins; Gluttony, Sloth, and Lust, are manifest; the dejectedness of a flave is likewise given him, and the ignorance of one bred up in a Defart Island. His person is monstrous, as he is the product of unnatural Luft; and his language is as hobgoblin as his perfon: in all things he is distinguished from other mortals. characters of Fletcher are poor and narrow, in comparison of Shakespears; I remember not one which is not borrow'd from him; unless you will except that strange mixture of a man in the King and no King: So that in this part Shakespear is generally worth our Imitation; and to imitate Fletcher is but to Copy after him who was a Copyer.

* * * *

If Shakefpear be allow'd, as I think he must, to have made his Characters distinct, it will easily be infer'd that he understood the nature of the Passions: because it has been prov'd already, that confus'd Passions make undistinguishable Characters: yet I cannot deny that he has his failings; but they are not so much in the passions themselves, as in his manner of expression: he often obscures his meaning by his words, and sometimes makes it unintelligible. I will not say of so great a Poet, that he distinguish'd not the blown puffy stile, from true sublimity; but I may venture to maintain that the fury of his fancy often transported him, beyond the bounds of Judgment, either in coyning of new words and phrases, or racking words which were in use, into the violence of Catachresis: 'T is not that I would explode the use of Metaphors from passions, for Longinus thinks 'em necessary to raise it; but to use 'em at every word, to say nothing without a Metaphor, a Simile, an Image, or description, is I doubt to smell a little too strongly of the Buskin. I must be forc'd to give an example of expressing passion figuratively; but that I may do it with respect to Shakefpear, it shall not be taken from anything of his: 't is an exclamation against Fortune, quoted in his Hamlet, but written by fome other Poet.

[Out, out, thou Strumpet, &c., down to As low as to the Fiends.] And immediately after speaking of Hecuba, when Priam was kill'd before her eyes:

[The mobbled Queen, &c., down to And passion in the Gods.]

But Shakespear does not often thus; for the passions in his Scene between Brutus and Cassius are extreamly natural, the thoughts are such as arise from the matter, and the expression of 'em not viciously figurative. I cannot leave this Subject before I do justice to that Divine Poet, by giving you one of his pasfionate descriptions: 't is of Richard the Second when he was depos'd, and led in Triumph through the Streets of London by Henry of Bullingbrook: the painting of it is fo lively, and the words fo moving, that I have fcarce read any thing comparable to it, in any other language. Suppose you have feen already the fortunate Usurper passing through the croud, and follow'd by the shouts and acclamations of the people; and now behold King Richard entring upon the Scene: consider the wretchedness of his condition, and his carriage in it; and refrain from pitty if you can.

[As in a Theatre, &c., down to have pity'd him.] * * * * *

If Shakefpear were stript of all the Bombast in his passions, and dress'd in the most vulgar words, we should find the beauties of his thoughts remaining; if his embroideries were burnt down, there would still be silver at the bottom of the melting-pot: but I fear (at least, let me say it for my felf) that we who Ape his sounding words, have nothing of his thought, but are all out-side; there is not so much as a dwarf within our Giants cloaths. Therefore, let not Shakespear suffer for our sakes; 't is our fault, who succeed him in an Age which is more resin'd, if we imitate him fo ill, that we coppy his failings only, and make a virtue of that in our Writings, which in his was an imperfection.

For what remains, the excellency of that Poet was, as I have faid, in the more manly passions; Fletcher's in the softer: Shakespear writ better betwixt man and man; Fletcher, betwixt man and woman: confequently, the one describ'd friendship better; the other love: yet Shakespear taught Fletcher to write love; and Juliet, and Defdemona, are Originals. 'T is true, the Scholar had the fofter foul; but the Master had the kinder. Friendship is both a virtue, and a Passion essentially; love is a passion only in its nature, and is not a virtue but by Accident: good nature makes Friendship; but effeminacy Love. Shakespear had an Universal mind, which comprehended all Characters and Passions; Fletcher a more confin'd and limited: for though he treated love in perfection, yet Honour, Ambition, Revenge, and generally all the stronger Pasfions, he either touch'd not, or not Masterly. To conclude all; he was a Limb of Shakespear.

Preface to Troilus and Cressida or Truth found too late, by John Dryden. 1679.

JOHN DRYDEN, 1679.

S

EE, my lov'd Britons, fee your Shakefpear rife, An awful ghost confess'd to human eyes!

Unnam'd, methinks, diftinguish'd I had been From other shades, by this eternal green, Above whose wreaths the vulgar poets strive, And with a touch their wither'd bays revive. Untaught, unpractis'd, in a barbarous age, I found not, but created first, the stage. And if I drain'd no Greek or Latin store, 'Twas that my own abundance gave me more. On foreign trade I needed not rely, Like fruitful Britain, rich without fupply. In this my rough-drawn play you shall behold Some mafter-ftrokes, fo manly and fo bold, That he, who meant to alter, found 'em fuch, He shook; and thought it sacrilege to touch. Now, where are the fucceffors to my name? What bring they to fill out a poet's fame? Weak, short-liv'd issues of a feeble age; Scarce living to be christen'd on the stage!

Prologue to Troilns and Cressida or Truth found too late, by John Dryden. 1679. (Spoken by Betterton as the Ghost of Shake-speare).

JOHN DRYDEN, 1675.

Aw'd when he hears his God-like Romans Rage.

Prologue to Aureng-zebe, or the Great Mogul, by John Dryden. 1692.

JOHN DRYDEN, 1681 circa.

NE nymph, to whom fat Sir John Falstaff's lean
There with her single person fills the scene.

Prologue to the University of Oxford. Prologues and Epilogues. 1779.

JOHN DRYDEN, 1690.

OW'S this, you cry? an actor write? we know it;

But Shakefpeare was an actor and a poet.

Has not great Jonson's learning often fail'd? While Shakespeare's greater genius still prevail'd.

Prologue to The Mislakes, by Joseph Harris. 1690.

JOHN DRYDEN, 1693.

HAKESPEARE, thy gift I place before my fight,

With awe I ask his bleffing as I

write;

With reverence look on his majestick face, Proud to be lefs, but of his godlike race. His foul inspires me, while thy praise I write, And I like Teucer under Ajax fight: Bids thee, through me, be bold; with dauntlefs breast Contemn the bad, and emulate the best: Like his, thy criticks in the attempt are lost, When most they rail, know then they envy most.

Epifle to Sir Godfrey Kneller. (Miscellany Poems.) 1694.

EDWARD PHILLIPS, 1669.

OC feculo [fc. temporibus Elizabethæ reginæ et Jacobi regis] floruerunt — Gulielmus Shacsperus, qui præter opera dramatica, duo poemata Lucretiæ stuprum à Tarquinio, et Amores Veneris in Adonidem, lyrica carmina nonnulla composuit: videtur suisse, siquis alius, re verâ poeta natus. Samuel Daniel non obscurus hujus ætatis poeta, etc.

* * Ex eis quis dramaticè scripserunt, primas sibi vendicant Shacsperus, Jonsonus et Fletcherus, quorum hic facundâ et politâ quâdam familiaritate sermonis, ille erudito judicio et usu veterum authorum, alter nativâ quâdam et poeticâ sublimitate ingenii excelluisse videntur. Ante hos in hoc genere poeseos apud nos eminuit nemo. Pauci quidem antea scripserunt, at parum sceliciter; hos autem tanquam duces itineris plurimi saltem æmulati sunt, inter quos præter Sherleium, proximum à supra memorato triumviratu, Suclingium, Randolphium, Davenantium et Carturitium—enumerandi veniunt Ric. Bromeus, Tho. Heivodus, etc.

Tractatulus de Carmine dramatico Poetarum, et compendiofa Enumeratio Poetarum a Tempore Dautis Aligerii ufque ad hanc Attatem. Added to the feventeenth edition of Thefaurus J. Buchleri. 1669.

EDWARD PHILLIPS, 1675.

IT, Ingenuity, and Learning in Verse, even Elegancy it felf, though that comes neerest, are one thing, true Native Poetry is another; in which there is a certain Air and Spirit, which perhaps the most Learned and judicious in other Arts do not perfectly apprehend, much lefs is it attainable by any Study or Industry; nay though all the Laws of Heroic Poem, all the Laws of Tragedy were exactly observed, yet still this tour entrejeant, this Poetick Energie, if I may fo call it, would be required to give life to all the reft, which shines through the roughest most unpolish't and antiquated Language, and may happly be wanting, in the most polite and reformed: let us observe Spencer, with all his Rustic, obsolete words, with all his rough-hewn clowterly Verses; yet take him throughout, and we shall find in him a gracefull and Poetic Majesty: in like manner Shakefpear, in fpight of all his unfiled expressions, his rambling and indigested Fancys, the laughter of the Critical, yet must be confess't a Poet above many that go beyond him in Literature some degrees. All this while it would be very unreasonable that those who have been learned, judicious or Ingenuous in Verse should be forgotten and left out of the circuit of Poets, in the larger acceptation.

* * * *

Benjamin Johnson, the most learned, judicious and correct, generally so accounted, of our English Comedians, and the more to be admired for being so, for that neither the height of natural parts, for he was no Shakesphear, nor the cost of Extraordinary Education; for he is reported but a Bricklayers Son, but his own proper Industry and Addiction to Books advanct him to this perfection:

* * *

Christopher Marlow, a kind of a second Shakesphear (whose contemporary he was) not only because like him he rose from an Actor to be a maker of Plays, though inferiour both in Fame and Merit; but also because in his begun Poem of Hero and Leander, he seems to have a resemblance of that clean and unsophisticated Wit, which is natural to that incomparable Poet;

* * * *

John Fletcher, one of the happy Triumvirat (the other two being Johnson and Shakespear) of the Chief Dramatic Poets of our Nation, in the last foregoing Age, among whom there might be said to be a symmetry of perfection, while each excelled in his peculiar way: Ben.

Johnson in his elaborate pains and knowledge of Authors, Shakespear in his pure vein of wit, and natural Poetic heighth; Fletcher in a courtly Elegance, and gentile familiarity of style, and withal a wit and invention so overslowing, that the luxuriant branches thereof were frequently thought convenient to be lopt off by his almost inseparable Companion Francis Beaumont.

* * * *

William Shakefpear, the Glory of the English Stage; whose nativity at Stratford upon Avon, is the highest honour that Town can boast of: from an Actor of Tragedies and Comedies, he became a Maker; and fuch a Maker, that though fome others may perhaps pretend to a more exact Decorum and aconomie, especially in Tragedy, never any express't a more lofty and Tragic heighth; never any reprefented nature more purely to the life, and where the polishments of Art are most wanting, as probably his Learning was not extraordinary, he pleafeth with a certain wild and native Elegance; and in all his Writings hath an unvulgar style, as well in his Venus and Adonis, his Rape of Lucrece and other various Poems, as in his Dramatics.

> Theatrum Poetarum. 1675. [12mo.] Preface, pp. 27 and 28, and the Modern Poets, pp. 19, 24, 108—9, and 194.

SIR CARR SCROPE, 1677-8.

HEN Shakespeare, Jonson, Fletcher, ruled the stage,

They took fo bold a freedom with the age,

That there was fcarfe a knave or fool in town Of any note, but had his portrait shown.

In Defense of Satyr. (Quoted by the Earl of Rochester in An Allusion to the Tenth Satyr of the First Book of Horace. 1678. p. 96.)

EARL OF ROCHESTER, 1678.

UT does not Dryden find even Jonson dull?

Beaumont and Fletcher uncorrect, and full

Of lewd lines, as he calls them? Shakespeare's ftyle

Stiff and affected? To his own the while Allowing all the justice that his pride
So arrogantly had to these denied?
And may I not have leave impartially
To search and censure Dryden's works, and try

If those gross faults his choice pen doth commit,

Proceed from want of judgment, or of wit? Or if his lumpish fancy does refuse Spirit and grace to his loose slattern muse? Five hundred verses every morning writ, Prove him no more a poet than a wit.

An Allusion to the Tenth Satyr of the First Book of Horace, 1678.

THOS. SHADWELL, 1678.

AM now to prefent your Grace with the History of Timon, which you were pleased to tell me you liked;

and it is the more worthy of you, fince it has the inimitable hand of Shakefpear in it, which never made more Masterly strokes than in this.

The Epifle Dedicatory of the History of Timon of Athens the Man-Hater, by Thos. Shadwell. 1678. [4to.]

THOMAS RYMER. 1678.

UT I grow weary of this Tragedy: In ["A King and no the former I took Latorch by his mouth, and ranting air for a copy of Caffius in Shakefpear: and that you may see Arbaces here, is not without his Caffian strokes.

Thus Caffius in Shakefpear.

Cass. . . . Brutus and Cæsar! what should there be in that Cæsar!

Why should that name be founded more than yours?

Write them together, yours is as fair a name: Sound them; it doth become the mouth as well: Weigh them, it is as heavy; conjure with them, man:

Brutus will flart a Spirit as well as Cæfar.

Now, in the name of all the Gods at once,

Upon what meat doth this our Cæfar feed,

That he is grown fo great? . . .

Thus Arbaces. Arb. . . . I have liv'd

To conquer men, and now am overthrown

Only by words, Brother and Sifter: where

Have those words dwelling? I will find'em out,

And utterly destroy'em: but they are

Not to be grafp'd: let'em be men or beasts,

I will cut'em from the earth; or Towns,

And I will raze'em, and then blow'em up:

Let'em be Seas, and I will drink'em off,

And yet have unquench'd sire within my breast:

Let'em be any thing but meerly voice.

The Tragedies of The Last Age consider'd and Examin'd by the Practice of the Ancients, and by the Common Sense of all Ages. 1678. [fm. 8vo.] pp.101—3.

JOHN MARTYN,
HENRY HERRINGMAN,
RICHARD MARIOT,

1679.

Authors right (in an incorrupt and genuine Edition of their Works) and thereby to gratifie and oblige the Reader, be but requited with a fuitable entertainment, we shall be encourag'd to bring Ben Johnson's two volumes into one, and publish them in this form; and also to reprint Old Shakespear: both which are designed by yours,

Ready to ferve you,

The Bookfellers to the Reader. Prefixed to the Second Edition of Beaumont and Fletcher's Works. 1679. [Fo.]

THOMAS OTWAY, 1680.

UR Shakspeare wrote, too, in an age as blest,

The happiest poet of his time, and best;

A gracious prince's favour cheer'd his muse, A constant favour he ne'er fear'd to lose, Therefore he wrote with fancy unconfin'd, And thoughts that were immortal as his mind. And from the crop of his luxuriant pen E'er since succeeding poets humbly glean. Though much the most unworthy of the throng,

Our this day's poet fears he's done him wrong.

Like greedy beggars that steal sheaves away, You'll find he's risled him of half a play. Amidst his baser dross you'll see it shine Most beautiful, amazing, and divine. Whilst we both wit's and Cæsar's absence mourn

Oh! when will he and poetry return? When shall we there again behold him sit, Midst shining boxes and a courtly pit, The lord of hearts and president of wit?

Prologue to Caius Marius (altered from Romeo and Juliet.) 1680. [4to.]

ABRAHAM COWLEY, 1680.

ROM this which has happened to myfelf, I began to reflect on the fortune of almost all writers, and efpecially poets, whose works (commonly printed after their deaths) we find stuffed out, either with counterfeit pieces, or with fuch [fluff] which, though of their own coin, they would have called in themselves, for the basenefs of the alloy; whether this proceed from the indifcretion of their friends, or by the unworthy avarice of fome stationers, who are content to diminish the value of the author, so they may increase the price of the book. This hath been the cafe with Shakspeare, Fletcher, Johnson, and many others, part of whose poems I should take the boldness to prune and lop away, if the care of replanting them in print did belong to me; neither would I make any fcruple to cut off from fome the unnecessary young fuckers, and from others the old withered branches, &c.

Preface to Poems. Ed. 1680. (1710, p. 53.)

SIR WILLIAM TEMPLE, 1680-1690.

HAKESPEAR was the first that opened this vein upon our Stage, [the Comic vein] which has run so freely and so pleasantly ever since, that I have often wondered to find it appear so little upon any others, being a subject so proper for them; since Humour is but a Picture of Particular Life, as Comedy is of General.

Miscellanea, Part ii, On Poetry. 1680-1690. [8vo.]

JOHN AUBREY, 1680 circa.

R. William Shakespeare was wont to goe into Warwickshire once a yeare, and did comonly in his journey lye at this house in Oxon. [the Crowne Taverne kept by John Davenant] where he was exceedingly respected. I have heard parson Robert say that Mr. Wm. Shakespeare having given him a hundred kisse—Now Sr. Wm. would sometimes, when he was pleasant over a glasse of wine with his most intimate friends,—e.g. Sam: Butler, (author of Hudibras) &c.,—say, that it seemed to him that he writt with the very spirit that Shakespear [did], and was contented enough to be thought his Son: he would tell them the story as above.

Mr. William Shakespear was borne at Stratford upon Avon, in the County of Warwick; his father was a Butcher, and I have been told heretofore by some of the neighbours, that when he was a boy he exercised his father's Trade, but when he kill'd a Calse he would doe it in a high style, and made a Speech. There was at that time another Butcher's son in this Towne that was held not at all inferior to him for a naturall witt, his acquaintance and coetanean, but dyed young. This Wm. being inclined naturally to Poetry and acting, came to London, I gueffe, about 18: and was an Actor at one of the Playhouses, and did act exceedingly well. Now B. Johnson was never a good Actor, but an excellent Instructor. He began early to make effayes at Dramatiq: Poetry, wch at that time was very lowe, and his Playes tooke well. He was a handfome well fhap't man; very good company, and of a very readie and pleafant fmooth Witt. The Humour of . . . the Constable, in a Midsomer-Night's Dreame, he happened to take at Grendon,* in Bucks, wch is the roade from London to Stratford, and there was living that Constable about 1642, when I first came to Oxon. Mr. Jos. Howe is of yt parish, and knew him. Johnson and he did gather Humours of men dayly wherever they came. One time as he was at the Tavern, at Stratford fup: Avon, one Combes, an old rich Usurer, was to be buryed, he makes there this extemporary Epitaph,

Ten in the Hundred the Devill allowes, But Combes will have twelve, he sweares and vowes:

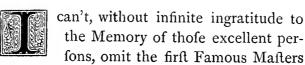

If any one askes who lies in this Tombe, 'Hoh!' quoth the Devill, 'Tis my John o Combe.'

^{*} I thinke it was Midfomer night that he happened to lye there.

He was wont to goe to his native Country once a yeare. I thinke that I have been told that he left 2 or 300 t p annu there and thereabout to a fifter. I have heard Sr Wm. Davenant and Mr. Thomas Shadwell (who is counted the best Comædian we have now) fay, that he had a most pdigyous Witt, and did admire his naturall parts beyond all other Dramaticall writers. He was wont to fay, that he never blotted out a line in his life; fayd Ben Johnson, 'I wish he had blotted out a thousand.' His Comœdies will remaine writt as long as the English-tongue is understood; for that he handles mores hominum: now our pfent writers reflect fo much upon pticular perfons and coxcombeities, that 20 yeares hence they will not be understood. Though, as Ben Johnson fayes of him, that he had but little Latine and lesse Greek, He understood Latine pretty well: for he had been in his younger yeares a schoolmaster in the Country.*

Aubrey Manuferipts: No. 4. pp. 27 & 78. Bodleian Library, Oxford. Printed in "Letters written by Emineut persons." 1813.

GEORGE SCUDERY, 1681.

in't, of our Nation, Venerable Shakespear and the great Ben Johnson: I have had a particular kindness always for most of Shakespear's Tragedies, and for many of his Comedies, and I can't but say that I can never enough admire his Stile (considering the time he writ in) and the great alteration that has been in the Resineing of our Language since) for he has expressed himself so very well in't that 'tis generally approv'd of still; and for maintaining of the Characters of the persons, design'd, I think none ever exceeded him;

Amaryllis to Tityrus. Being the First Heroick Harangue of the Excellent Pen of Monsieur Scudery. A Witty and Pleasant Novel. Englished by a Person of Honour. 1681. [Sm: 8vo.]

Containing "An Effay on Dramatick Poetry." pp. 66-67.

J. CROWN, 1681.

O day we bring old gather'd Herbs, 'tis true,

But fuch as in fweet Shakefpears Garden grew.

And all his Plant's immortal you esteem, Your Mouthes are never out of taste with him. Howe're to make your Appetites more keen, Not only oyly Words are sprinkled in; But what to please you gives us better hope, A little Vineger against the Pope.

For by his feeble Skill 'tis built alone, The Divine Shakefpear did not lay one stone.

Prologues to Henry the Sixth, by J. Crown. [410.] 1681. Parts I & II.

SIR GEORGE RAYNSFORD, 1682.

ET he prefumes we may be fafe to Day,

Since Shakespear gave Foundation

to the Play:

"Tis alter'd—and his facred Ghost appeas'd; I wish you All as easily were pleas'd:

Prologue to the Ingratitude of a Commonwealth, by Nahum Tate. 1682. [4to.]

JOHN SHEFFIELD, Earl of Mulgrave, 1682.

 $LA\ TO$ and Lucian are the best Remains

Of all the wonders which this art contains;

Yet to our felves we Justice must allow, Shakespear and Fletcher are the wonders now: Consider them, and read them o're and o're, Go see them play'd, then read them as before. For though in many things they grosly fail, Over our Passions still they so prevail, That our own grief by theirs is rockt asleep, The dull are forc'd to feel, the wife to weep. Their Beauties Imitate, avoid their faults;

* * * *

The other way's too common, oft we fee A fool derided by as bad as he; Hawks fly at nobler game, but in his way, A very Owl may prove a Bird of prey; Some Poets fo will one poor Fop devour; But to Collect, like Bees from every flower, Ingredients to compose that precious juice, Which serves the world for pleasure and for use,

In fpite of faction this will favour get, But Falflaff feems unimitable yet.

An Essay upon Poetry. 1682. Anon. [4to.] pp. 14 & 16.

JOHN BANKS, 1682.

SAY not this to derogate from those excellent Persons, who, I ought to believe, have written more to please their Audiences, than themselves; but to perfwade them, as Homer, and our Shakespear did, to Immortalize the Places where they were born;

Dedication Vertue Betray'd, or Anna Bullen. 1682.

KNIGHTLY CHETWOOD, 1684.

UCH was the case when *Chaucer's*early toyl

Founded the Mufes Empire in our Soyl.

Spencer improv'd it with his painful hand But lost a Noble Muse in Fairy-land.

Shakspeare say'd all that Nature cou'd impart, And Johnson added Industry and Art.

Cowley, and Denham gain'd immortal praise; And some who merit as they wear, the Bays.

Commendatory Verses prefixed to An Essay on Translated Verse, by the Earl of Roscommon. 1684. [4to.]

WILLIAM WINSTANLEY, 1684.

The Life of Mr. Wil. Shakespeare.

HIS worthy Poet Mr. Shakespeare, the glory of the English Stage, was born at Stratford upon Avon in Warwickshire, and is the highest honour that Town can boast of; in whom three eminent Poets may feem in some fort to be compounded. 1. Martial, in the warlike sound of his Surname, Hasti-Vibrans or Shakespeare, whence some have conjectured him of Military extraction. 2. Ovid, the most natural and witty of all Poets; and hence it was that Queen Elizabeth coming into a Grammar-School made this extemporary Verse.

Persius a crab-staff, Bawdy Martial, Ovid a fine Wag.

3. Plautus, a very exact Comedian, and yet never any Scholar, as our Shakefpeare (if alive) would confess himself; but by his conversing with jocular Wits, whereto he was naturally enclined, he became so famously witty, or wittily famous, as without learning, he attained to an extraordinary height in the Comique strain; yet was he not so much given to Festivity, but he could (when so disposed) be solemn and serious; so that Heraclitus himself might afford to smile at his Comedies they were so merry, and Democritus scarce forbear to sigh at his Tradgedies, they were so mournful.

From an Actor of Tradgedies and Comedies, he became a Maker; and fuch a Maker, that though fome others may perhaps pretend to a more exact decorum and Oeconomie, especially in Tradgedy, never any exprest a more lofty and Tragick height; never any represented Nature more purely to the life, and where the polishments of Art are most wanting, (for as we said before, his learning was not extraordinary) he pleaseth with a certain wild and native Elegance; and in all his writings hath an unvulgar Style, as well in his Venus and Adonis, his Rape of Lucrece, and other various Poems, as in his Drammaaticks.

He was an eminent instance of the truth of that Rule, Pæta non fit fed nafciter, one is not Made but Born a Poet, so that as Cornish Diamonds are not Polished by any Lapidary, but are pointed and smoothed even as they are taken out of the Earth, so Nature it self was all the Art which was used on him.

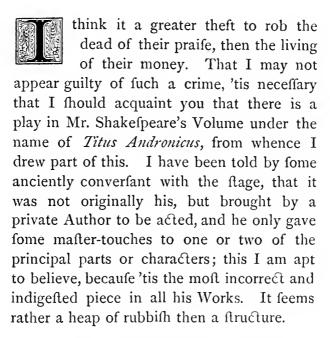

To enumerate his Comedies, they are fo many, would be too tedious, that of his Henry, the fourth though full of fublime Wit, is very much blamed by fome, for making Sir John Falkstaff the property of pleasure for King Henry to abuse, as one that was a Thrasonical Puff, and Emblem of mock-valour; though indeed he was a man of Arms, every inch of him, and as Valiant as any in his Age.

Many were the Wit Combats betwixt him and Ben Johnson, which two we may compare to a Spanish great Gallion, and an Englishman of War, Mr. Johnson (like the former) was built far higher in Learning; folled but slow in his performances; Shakespeare with the Englishman of War, lesser in bulk, but lighter in failing, could turn with all Tides, tack about and take advantage of all Winds, by the quickness of his Wit and invention. This our famous Comedian died, Anno Domini 16... and was buried at Stratford upon Avon, the Town of his Nativity, upon whom one hath bestowed this Epitaph.

Renowned Spenfer, lye a thought more nigh To learned Chaucer, and rare Beaumont lye, A little nearer Spenfer, to make room [Tomb, For Shakespear, in your threefold, fourfold To lodge all four in one Bed make a shift Vntil Dooms-day, for hardly will a fifth Betwixt this day and that, by Fates be flain, For whom your Curtains may be drawn again. If your precedency in death do bar, A fourth place in your facred Sepulchar; Vnder this facred Marble of thine own, Sleep rare Tragedian Shakespear! fleep alone, Thy unmolested peace in an unshar'd Cave. Poffess as Lord not Tenant of thy Grave, That unto us, and others it may be, Honour hereafter to be laid by thee.

> England's Worthies. Select Lives Of the most Eminent Perfons of the English Nation, &c. By Will. Winstanley, 1684, pp. 345-7. [8vo.]

EDWARD RAVENSCROFT, 1686.

Preface to Titus Andronicus, or the Rape of Lavinia. 1686. [4to.]

NAHUM TATE, 1689.

OTHING but the Power of your Perfuasion, and my zeal for all the remains of Shakespear, cou'd have wrought me to fo bold an Undertaking. I found that the New-modelling of this Story. wou'd force me fometimes on the difficult Task of making the chiefest Persons speak something like their Character, on Matter whereof I had no Ground in my Author. Lear's real and Edgar's pretended Madness have so much of Extravagant Nature, (I know not how elfe to express it,) as cou'd never have started but from our Shakespear's Creating Fancy. The Images and Language are fo odd and furprizing, and yet fo agreeable and proper, that whilft we grant that none but Shakespear cou'd have form'd fuch Conceptions; yet we are fatisfied that they were the only Things in the World that ought to be faid on those Occafions.

> Dedication ("To my efteemed Friend Tho. Botcler, Efq.") of the Hiftory of King Lear, by N. Tate. 1689. [4to.]

NAHUM TATE. 1689.

E hopes fince in rich Shakespeare's foil it grew

'Twill relish yet, with those whose Tasts are true,

And his Ambition is to pleafe a Few.

If then this Heap of Flow'rs shall chance to wear

Fresh beauty in the Order they now bear,

E'en this is Shakespear's Praise; each rustick knows

'Mongst plenteous Flow'rs a Garland to Compose

Which strung by this Course Hand may fairer show,

But 'twas a Power Divine first made 'em grow.

Prologue to the History of King Lear, by N. Tate. 1689. [4to.]

WILLIAM FULMAN. [RICHARD DAVIES], 1690 circa.

Stratford upon Avon in Warwickfhire, about 1563-4. [Much given to all unluckinesse in stealing venison and Rabbits particularly from Sr Lucy, who had him oft whipt and sometimes imprisoned and at last made Him sly his native country to his great advancem! but His revenge was so great, that he is his Justice Clodpate, and calls him a great man & yt in allusion to his name bore three lowses rampant for his arms.]

From an actor of playes he became a composer. He dyed Apr. 23, 1616, ætat. 53, probably at Stratford, for there he is buryed and hath a monument. Dugd. p. 520. [on we're he lays a Heavy curse upon any one who shal remoove his bones. He dyed a Papist]

Fulman Manuscripts (1670—1688) vol. xv, No. 7, p. 22. In the Library of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. (The portions here in brackets are those attributed to Davies.)

WILLIAM LANGBAINE. 1691.

NE of the most Eminent Poets of his Time: His Natural Genius to Poetry was fo excellent, that like those Diamonds*, which are found in Cornwall, Nature had little, or no occasion for the Assistance of Art to polish The Truth is, 't is agreed on by most, that his Learning was not extraordinary; and I am apt to believe, that his Skill in the French and Italian Tongues, exceeded his Knowledge in the Roman Language: fo I should think I were guilty of an Injury beyond pardon to his Memory, should I so far disparage it, as to bring his Wit in competition with any of our Age. * I shall * take the Liberty to fpeak my Opinion, as my predeceffors have done, of his Works; which is this, That I esteem his Plays beyond any that have ever been published in our Language: and tho' I extreamly admire Johnson, and Fletcher; yet I must still aver, that when in competition with Shakefpear, I must apply to them what Justus Lipsius writ in his Letter to Andreas Schottus, concerning Terence and Plantus, when compar'd; Terentium amo, admiror, fed Plautum magis.

> An Account of the English Dramatick Poets, Oxford. 1691. [8vo.] pp. 453-4.

^{*} Dr. Fuller in his Account of Shakefpear.

JOHN DOWDALL. APRIL 10, 1693.

HE first remarkable place in this County that I visitted was Stratford super Avon, where I saw the effigies of our English tragedian Mr. Shakespeare; of our English tragedian Mr. Shakespeare; parte of his epitaph I sent Mr. Lowther, and desired he would impart it to you, which I sinde by his last letter he has done: but here I send you the whole inscription.

Just under his Effigies in the wall of the Chancell is this written.

[Here follows the Infcription, as on page 87 ante.]

Neare the wall where his monument is erected lyeth a plaine free stone, underneath which his bodie is buried with this epitaph, made by himselfe a little before his death.

[Here follows the Infcription, as on page 68 ante.]

The clarke that shew'd me this church is above 80 years old; he says that this Shake-spear was formerly in this towne bound apprentisce to a butcher, but that he run from his master to London, and there was received into the playhouse as a ferviture, and by this meanes had an oppertunity to be what he afterwards prov'd. He was the best of his samily, but the male line is extinguished: not one for feare of the curse abovesaid dare touch his grave-stone, though his wife and daughters did earnestly desire to be layd in the same grave with him.

Autograph letter, figned "John at Stiles," and endorfed "10. Aprill. 1693. From Mr. Dowdall. Description of Severall places in Warwickshire;" and in Dowdall's handwriting, "These for Mr. Southwell. pr Sent." First printed under the title of "Traditionary Anecdotes of Shakespeare, collected in Warwickshire, in the year MDCXCIII." 1838. [8vo.]

SHAKESPEARE UPON THE KING.

ROWNES have their compasse, length of days their date,

Triumphes their tombs, felicity her

fate;

Of more then earth cann Earth make none partaker,

But knowledge makes the King most like his Maker.

From a volume of manufcript poems, in a handwriting of about the time of the Restoration, which belonged to the late Sir Alexander Bofwell.

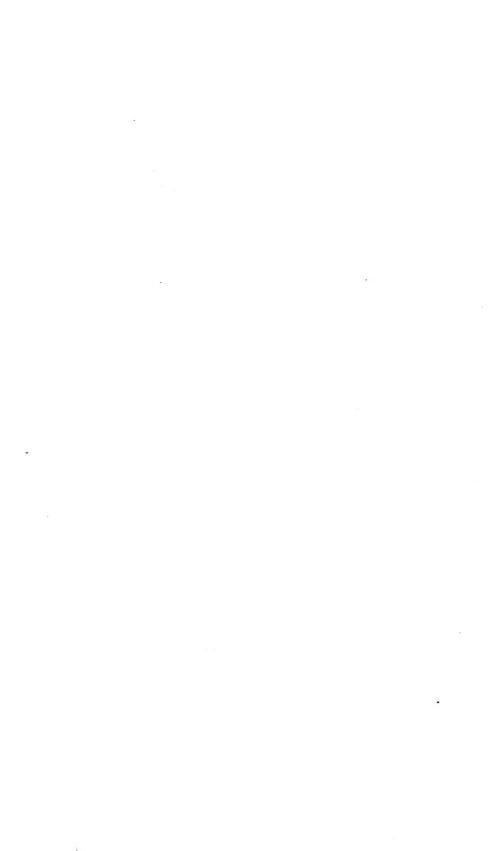

Elucidations

то

THE FOURTH PERIOD

OF

SHAKESPEARE'S CENTURIE OF PRAYSE.

ELUCIDATIONS.

--0---

PAGE 241.

This "Mrs. Queeny" is Judith Quiney, Shake-speare's daughter. She died in 1662.

PAGE 242.

Under date 1667, April 9 and Nov. I, Pepys records his going to the King's House (the Lord Chamberlain's men were now the King's men) and seeing "The Tameing of a Shrew," which he calls "a mean play," and "a silly play;" though on both occasions he allows that it "hath some very good pieces in it." He also complains of its archaic phrase-ology. This is the older play.

We have excluded these entries from our text, believing that Mr. Richard Simpson is in error in receiving this as an early work of our great dramatist. (See The School of Shakespeare: p. vi, prefixed to Mr. Simpson's edition of A Larum for London, 1872.)

Pepys' first notice of "Macbeth" (January 7, 1666-7) is sensible and to the point. It is a "strange perfection in a tragedy," that the divertisement prevails over the horror which it is its purpose to evoke.

PAGE 250.

Two other ballads of Thomas Jordan are founded on Shakespeare: viz., The Forfeiture: a Romance, and The Revolution: a Love-story; the former on The Merchant of Venice, the latter on Much Ado about Nothing.

PAGE 251.

The writer of the Sociable Letters was the second wife of William, Marquess of Newcastle, the patron of Ben Jonson. In the preface she writes:

"I have Endeavoured under the Cover of Letters to Express the Humors of Mankind, and the Actions of Man's Life by the correspondence of two Ladies living at some short distance from each other, &c."

Margaret Cavendish was a woman of sense and accomplishment; but, while her thoughts are usually common-place, she conveys them by an apparatus of phraseology which is clear rather than forcible, and disproportionately diffuse. Her summary of Shakespeare's virtues is little more than an inventory, and is tautologically particular. Yet we must allow that the occasion called for the critique; and at that day it was not superfluous to insist upon the identity of the poet with each and every of his great characters. The paradox, "'tis harder to express nonsense than sense," is a great truth, singularly applicable to Shakespeare's art. What she says as to the effect of his tragedy on readers is also felicitous: and her remark on the Roman plays-"that Antonius and Brutus did not speak better to the people than he had [has] feigned them"-is reiterated with excellent effect by Archbishop Trench, in his Lectures on Plutarch. That she imitated Shakespeare, in her poems, is countenanced by similarities of diction: e. g., in 1656 she writes:

> "Had finews room fancy therein to breed, Copies of verfes might from the heel proceed."

which appears to be imitated from King Lear, where the fool says:

"If a man's brains were in his heels, were't not in danger of kibes?"

Some account of this admirable woman is given in Pepys' Diary, vol. iii, pp. 139—140 (Ed. 1848, in 5 vols.), and in Evelyn's Diary and Correspondence, vol. ii, p. 26 (Ed. 1859, in 4 vols.).

PAGE 257.

There is no doubt D'Avenant, whatever may have been his parentage or his morals, had very considerable poetical abilities. Remembering the tradition recorded by Aubrey (page 293), it is interesting to read the testimony of Dryden to his dramatic excellence. It is prefixed to the play written by them jointly upon the suggestion of Shakespeare's Tempest, and runs thus:

"In the time I writ with him, I had the opportunity to observe somewhat more nearly of him than I had formerly done, when I had onely a bare acquaintance with him: I found him then of so quick a fancy, that nothing was proposed to him on which he could not suddenly produce a thought extreamly pleasant and surprising: and those first thoughts of his, contrary to the old Latine Proverb, were not always the least happy. And as his fancy was quick, so likewise were the products of it remote and new. He borrowed not of any other: and his imaginations were such as could not easily enter into any other man. His corrections were sober and judicious: and he corrected his own writings much more severely than those of another man, bestowing twice the time and labour in polishing, which he us'd in invention."

Preface to The Tempest or The Enchanted Island. 1674.

PAGE 258.

This clever Prologue was identified by Mr. Bolton Corney (Notes and Queries, 1st S. ix, 95). Boaden (Inquiry, 1824, p. 38) regretted "that Dryden did not let out more of his mighty spirit in the verses" addressed to Kneller. "He might have rendered them the vehicle of a discriminated character of Shakespeare, such as should rival that written by himself in such admirable prose." Boaden did not know that Dryden had done this in his Prologue to Julius Casar.

The line-

"Twas well in fpite of him whate'er he writ," reminds us of Pope's assertion that Shakespeare
"grew immortal in his own despite."

PAGE 260.

This page of our extracts from Dryden's Defence of the Epilogue was unfortunately worked off before it had been collated with the edition of 1679. The chief differences are these: In that edition, l. I, Language; ll. 4 and 18, Shakespear and Fletcher; l. 5, Jonson; l. 9, improvement, and l. 20, solecism, are printed in italics. For spelling, l. 21, it is "sence;" l. 22, "reverenc'd"; and l. 26, "multa." For punctuation, l. 8, "line. But"; l. 17, dele comma after "man," and l. 19, insert comma after "find."

PAGE 265.

The Slighted Maid is a comedy by Sir R. Stapylton, first edition [sm. 4to], 1663. It is not recorded in Halliwell's Dictionary of Old English Plays. Dryden again mentions it in the Preface to his Troilus and Cressida, 1679: "Of this nature is the Slighted Maid; where there is no scene in the first Act, which might not by as good reason be in the fifth."

PAGE 276.

As Dryden here calls up the Ghost of Shakespeare, so does Bevill Higgons, a score of years later, call up "The Ghosts of Shakespear and Dryden Crown'd with Lawrel" to speak his prologue to George Granville's (Lord Lansdowne's) adaptation of the Merchant of Venice. See The Jew of Venice, A Comedy as it is acted at the Theatre in Little Lincolns-Inn-Fields By His Majesty's Servants. 1713 (1st Ed. 1701). This is perhaps the worst of the series of plays adapted from Shakespeare.

PAGE 283.

We have here Shakesphear, twice. It is not a misprint, but a recognised form of spelling our great bard's name. We find it in some editions of Camden's Remaines Concerning Britaine: e. g., the Ed. of 1614 and 1637, which have Shakespheare. (See ante, p. 9, where, however, 1605 should be 1614.) Again, in the deed under which Shakespeare purchased, for £440, the unexpired term in a moiety of the tithes of Stratford, Old Stratford, Bishopton, and Welcombe, we find Shakespeare once, Shackesphere thrice, Shakespear once, Shakesphere five times, Shacksphare once, Shaksphere once.

and once he is referred to under his initials.

(Halliwell's Life of Shakespeare, 1848, pp. 210-216.)

In view of all these and other variations in the spelling of his name, and the fact that in five authentic signatures the bard himself adopts three different styles, what is the force of Mr. F. J. Furnivall's demand on the members of the New Shackespheare Society, viz., the concession that Shackespheare knew how to spell his own name? It is proved that there was no fixed orthography of the name; and we know that the printers of his works uniformly give it Shakespeare: the style which he had himself adopted in his two dedications.

PAGE 285.

This poet was the last baronet of the nar author of some poetical things, principally tions from Ovid, (e. g., the Epistle of Sa Phaon) and Horace. The passage we have corresponds to the first five lines of Horace iv of Book I, from which we infer that the of Satyr is imitated from that satire. We do now whether Sir Carr Scrope's entire poem is extended the Earl of Rochester's Works (Tonson), 1712 will be found his Allusion, &c.; and the extra tioning Shakespeare is quoted at p. 96. Rooreply at p. 100 ends with these personalities:

Half-witty and half-mad, and fcarce half-brav Half-honest (which is very much a knave) Made up of all these halfs, thou can'ft not pass For anything intirely but an ass.

PAGE 291.

In the edition of Cowley's works, 1680, we an addition to the text as we have given it: "I should take the boldness," we find, "I presume to take the boldness." Had his sens own audacity grown in the meanwhile?

PAGE 293.

We have the testimony of Pope to the proof this story in his day. We read under date Spence's Observations, Anecdotes, and Charact posed to be more nearly related to him than as a g One day, when Shakespeare was just arrived, and t for from school to him, a head of one of the College pretty well acquainted with the affairs of the fam child running home, and asked him whither he was much haste? the boy said, 'to my godfather, Sha' Fie, child,' says the old gentleman, 'why are you

Mrs. D'Avenant: and her fon, afterwards Sir Willia

Probably this story is but a renovated versi recorded by John Taylor (Workes, Ed. 1630 where the "godfather" in question was "Digland the gardiner."

"If tradition may be trusted, Shakespeare often b fluous; have you not learnt yet that you should Oldys writes:

name of God in vain?"

Crown Inn or Tavern in Oxford, in his journey to London. The landlady was a woman of great of fprightly wit; and her husband, Mr. John Dave wards mayor of that city), a grave, melancholy may well as his wife, used much to delight in Shakespear company. Their son, young Will Davenant (after William), was then a little school-boy in the town seven or eight years old, and so fond also of Shakes whenever he heard of his arrival, he would fly from shim. One day an old townsman observing the bomeward almost out of breath, asked him whither the care that you don't take God's name in vain. The Pope told me at the Earl of Oxford's table . . . he quoted Mr. Betterton the player for his authorit Manuscripts: Brit. Mus.

ing in that heat and hurry. He answered to see his Shakespeare. There's a good boy, said the other,

PAGE 299.

Sheffield was Earl of Mulgrave from 1658 to 1694, and not Duke of Buckinghamshire till 1703.

PAGE 301.

Winstanley takes the bulk of his biography from Fuller. See Warwickshire Worthies. 1662. Part iii, p. 220. [fo.] Ante p. 115.

PAGE 308.

This annotator on the adversaria of the Rev. Wm. Fulman is believed to have been the Rev. Richard Davies, Rector of Sapperton in Gloucestershire: but his name does not appear on the manuscript. It is in five or six different hands; and only two other annotations, both very short, are in Davies' supposed autograph. Little is known of him. He died in 1708. By "Justice Clodpate" Davies designates Shakespeare's Shallow. We observe that Dowdall, at the end of his letter to Southwell (quoted ante p. 310), applies the same nickname to one of the sitting judges of the Spring Assize at Warwick, in 1693.

Page 309.

Langbaine, too, makes free with Fuller's Worthies. Two copies of his Account were annotated by Oldys. The one which received his second annotations is in the British Museum Library. A propos of this book, we venture to suggest that it would be a very great convenience if the Chief Librarian of the British Museum would issue a hand-list of printed books which have manuscript annotations; such as Dr. Thomas Warton's copy of Spenser's works, and Tieck's copy of Ben Jonson's works, with the marginalia and other notes in full.

Oldys' notes on Langbaine belong to a period later than our Centurie. There is, however, a well-known epigram, said to be by Jonson and Shakespeare, which according to George Steevens, Oldys puts forth as if he had derived it from an authentic source of some antiquity. We have not been able to recover the particular manuscript in which he is said to have given it. In Johnson and Steevens' 2nd Edition of Shakespeare 1778, pp. 204-5 (see also Malone's Edition, 1790, vol. i, p. 163), the following is given:

"Verses by Ben Jonson and Shakespeare, occasioned by the motto to the Globe Theatre.—Totus mundus agit histrionem.

Jonson. If but flage actors all the world displays,
Where shall we find spectators of their plays?
Shakespeare. Little or much of what we see we do;
We're all both actors and spectators too."

According to Steevens, Oldys' authority for these verses is "Poetical Characteristicks, 8vo MS., vol. i, some time in the Harleian Library; which volume was returned to its owner."

The whole story is suspicious. The alleged "motto to the Globe Theatre" is altered from the Fragmenta of Petronius Arbiter. See Trajecti, 1709, p. 673. The original words are "quod fere totus mundus exerceat histrionem."

Then again, on the title page of Oldys' second copy of Langbaine, we have evidence that Oldys himself wrote the verses: for there we read

Totus mundus agit histrionem.

If all the world the actor plays,
Who are Spectators of its Plays?

This is again altered by Oldys into

If but Stage-Actors all the World difplays, Who are allowed Spectators of their Plays?

and finally he has written on the left side margin,

Little or much of what we fee we do, We are both Actors and Spectators too. Not a word of Ben Jonson or Shakespeare. Can it be that these two verses were dished up by George Steevens, and assigned by him to Jonson and Shakespeare, as a hoax on his credulous public.

For a full account of Oldys' annotated Langbaine, see Notes and Queries, 3rd S., vol. i, p. 81.

SHAKESPEARE'S CENTURIE OF PRAYSE.

SUPPLEMENTARY EXTRACTS.

THOMAS NASH, 1592.

OW would it have joy'd brave Talbot (the terror of the French) to thinke that after he had lyne two hundred yeare in his tomb, he should triumph againe on the stage, and have his bones new embalmed with the teares of ten thousand spectators at least, (at severall times) who, in the tragedian that represents his person, imagine they behold him fresh bleeding?

Pierce Penilesse His supplication to the Devill.

Describing the over-spreading of Vice, and the suppression of Vertue, &c. 1592. [440.]

FRANCIS MERES, 1596.

ICHAEL DRAYTON (quem toties honoris & amoris caufa nomino) among fchollers, fouldiours, Poets, and all forts of people, is helde for a man of vertuous disposition, honest conversation, and wel governed cariage, which is almost miraculous among good wits in these declining and corrupt times, when there is nothing but rogery in villanous man, and when cheating [1 Hen. IV, ii, 3.] and craftines is counted the cleanest wit, and foundest wisedome.

Palladis Tamia. Wits Treasury Being the Second part of Wits Commonwealth. 1598, fol. 281. [12mo.]

THOMAS DECKER, 1602.

E must have false fiers to amaze these spangle babies, these true heires of Ma. Justice Shallow.

Satiro - Mastix, or the Untrussing of the Humorous Poet. 1602. [4to.]

BEN JONSON, 1605.

ASTLY I would informe you, that this Booke, in all nubers, is not the fame with that which was acted on the publike Stage, wherein a fecond Pen had good share: in place of which I have rather chosen, to put weaker (and no doubt lesse pleasing) of mine own, then to defraud so happy a Genius of his right, by my lothed usurpation.

Ben. Johnson. and no fuch.

Quem Palma negata macrum, donata reducit opimum.

Sejanus his Fall. 1605. [4to.] To the Readers.

1607.

E'LL ha' the ghost i' th' white sheet sit at the upper end o' th' table.

The Puritan, or the Widow of Walling Street, 1607. [Anon. 4to.]

SIR WILLIAM DRUMMOND, 1614.

HE authors I have seen on the subject of love are,—Sidney, Daniel, Drayton, Spenser,—the last we have are Sir W. Alexander and Shakespeare, who have lately published their works.

Works: Fo: 1656. p. 226.

ROBERT ANTON, 1616.

R why are women rather growne fo mad,

That their immodest feete like planets gad

With such irregular motion to base Playes,
Where all the deadly finnes keepe hollibaies.
There shall they see the vices of the times,
Orestes incest, Cleopatres crimes.

Sooner may shamelesse wives hate Braindford feasts,

Albertus Magnus, or the pilfred Jests
Of some spruce Skipiack Citizen from Playes,
A Coach, the secret Baudihouse for waies,
And riotous waste of some new Freeman made,
That in one yeere to peices breakes his trade,
Then wash the toad-like speckles of defame,
That swell the world with poyson of their shame:

What Comedies of errors swell the flage With your most publike vices, when the age Dares personate in action, for, your cies Ranke Sceanes of your lust-sweating qualities.

The Philosopher's Satyrs. 1616. [4to.] Pp. 46 & 51. Fifth Satyr. Of Venus.

SIR WILLIAM CORNWALLIS, 1617.

ET neither can his blood redeem him [Richard III] from injurious tongues, nor the reproch offered his body be thought cruell enough, but that we must still make him more cruelly infamous in pamphlets and plays.

The Prayse of King Richard the Third. 1617, being part of a Collection of Scarce and Valuable Tracts, &c., of the late Lord Somers. 1810. [4to.] Vol. 3. p. 328.

MICHAEL DRAYTON, 1627.

HAKESPEARE thou hadft as fmooth a Comicke vaine, Fitting the focke, and in thy natural braine,

As firong conception, and as Cleere a rage, As any one that trafiqu'd with the flage.

"To my most deavely-loved friend HENERY REYNOLDS, Esquire, of Poets and Poesse." From Elegies appended to the Battaile of Agincourt: &c. 1627. [sm. fo.]

1644.

LTHOUGH he came with confidence to the scaffold, and the blood wrought lively in his cheeks, yet when he did lye down upon the block he trembled every joint of him; the sense of something after death, and the undiscovered country unto which his soul was wandering startling his resolution, and possessing every joint of him with an universal palsey of sear.

London Post, January, 1644. (On the Execution of Archbishop Laud.)

1655.

NOW-WELL. Upon a rainy day, or when you have nought elfe to do, you may read Sir Walter Raleigh, Lord Bacon's Natural History, the Holy Warre, and Brown's Vulgar Errors. You may find, too, fome stories in the English Eusebius and the Book of Martyrs, to hold discourse with the Parson on a Sunday dinner.

Mrs. Love-wit. Sometimes to your wife you may read a piece of Shak-speare, Suckling, and Ben Jonson too, if you can understand him.

Know. You may read the Scout and Weekly Intelligence, and talk politickly after it. And if you get fome fmattering in the Mathematicks, it would not be amiffe, the Art of dyalling, or to fet your clock by a quadrant, and Geography enough to measure your own land.

The Hectors; or, the Falfe Challenge. 1656. (Notes and Queries: 5th S. i, 304.)

 The two following extracts reached us after the foregoing had been printed.

Т. М., 1604.

OME you to fearch an honest Bawdiehouse, this seven and twentie yeares in same and shame? goe too then, you shall fearch; nay, my very Bootes too: are you well now? the least hole in my house too, are you pleased now? can we not take our ease in our Inne, but we must come out so quickly? Nawd, goe to bed, sweet Nawd, thou wilt coole thy grease anon, and make thy fat cake.

The Blacke Booke. 1604. [4to.] Sig. B 4.

HE true and primary intent of the

J. S., 1651.

Tragedians and Commedians of old, was to magnifie Virtue, and to deprefs Vice; And you may observe throughout the Works of incomparable Johnson, excellent Shakespear, and elegant Fletcher, &c., they (however vituperated by some streight-laced brethren not capable of their sublimity,) aim at no other end.

An excellent Comedy, called the Prince of Priggs revels; or, the Practices of that grand Thief Captain James Hinds, relating Divers of his pranks and exploits, never heretofore publifhed by any. Repleat with various conceits and Tarltonian mirth, fuitable to the fubject. 1651. [4to.] Addrefs "To the Reader."

Elucidations

TO THE

SUPPLEMENTARY EXTRACTS

OF

SHAKESPEARE'S CENTURIE OF PRAYSE.

± € 0

4%

ELUCIDATIONS.

--0--

PAGE 327.

We have here doubtless an allusion to the play of Henery the vi mentioned in Henslowe's Diary (March 3, 1591-2): and this may be identical with the First Part of Henry the Sixth in the Folio Edition of Shakespeare, 1623. Whether Shakespeare had any share in this play is, to say the least, problematical. Nash's work was reprinted for the Shakespeare Society in 1842 under Mr. J. P. Collier's superintendence. That gentleman reprinted it again for his Yellow Series. It is remarkable that these two reprints manifest many discrepancies.

Page 328.

We have here an expression quoted from the First Part of Henry IV, ii, 3, where Falstaff says:

"You Rogue, heere's Lime in this Sacke too: there is nothing but Roguery to be found in Villanous man."

Page 329.

A slight allusion to Henry IV.

PAGE 330.

We apprehend that it would not be difficult to extract from some of Ben Jonson's earlier plays the lines contributed by "so happy a Genius" as Shakespeare. The most notable is that transcendently majestic passage on poetry, which appears in the first edition of Every Man in his Humour, but is omitted from every subsequent edition. We have no doubt that it was written by Shakespeare. These are the lines:

Lorenzo junior.

Opinion, O God let grosse opinio sinck and be damnd As deep as Barathrum. If it may stand with your most wisht content. I can refell opinion and approve, The state of poesie, such as it is, Blessed, æternall, and most true devine: Indeede if you will looke on Poesie, As the appeares in many, poore and lame, Patcht up in remnants and old worne [out] ragges, Halfe starvd for want of her peculiar foode: Sacred invention, then I must conferme, Both your conceite and cenfure of her merrite, But view her in her glorious ornaments, Attired in the majestie of arte, Set high in spirite with the precious taste, Of fweet philosophie, and which is most. Crownd with the rich traditions of a foule, That hates to have her dignitie prophand. With any relish of an earthly thought: Oh then how proud a prefence doth she beare Then is she like her selfe, fit to be seene, Of none but grave and confecrated eyes: Nor is it any blemish to her fame, That fuch leane ignorant, and blafted wits, Such brainlesse guls, should utter their stolne wares With such aplaufes in our vulgar eares: Or that their flubberd lines have currant passe, From the fat judgements of the multitude, But that this barren and infected age, Should fet no difference twixt these empty spirits, And a true Poet: then which reverend name, Nothing can more adorne humanitie.

Every Man in his humor. 1601 (last scene).

The motto affixed to Ben's signature to this epistle is most happily chosen. It is from Horace's Ep: II, i, an epistle which he must have well conned.

PAGE 331.

A slight allusion to the ghost of Banquo in Macbeth.

PAGE 332.

This note of Drummond's must belong to the period of 1614-1616; for Alexander was not knighted till 1614, and Shakespeare, who died in 1616, is here spoken of as a living author. The word "lately" induces us to give the earliest date possible to the note.

PAGE 334.

When we prepared the copy of our Third Period we deliberately excluded this extract, because we saw nothing whatever in it constituting an allusion to Shakespeare. But observing that Mr. Bohn (Lowndes' B. M., 2312) remarks, "This work contains the Prayse [sic] of Richard the Third, in which are some curious references to plays on the history of that Sovereign by Shakespeare," we have given the only passage in it which can be supposed to refer to Shakespeare. If there be anything else to the point in this essay, it has escaped our search.

PAGE 335.

Professor David Masson in his admirable Life of Sir Wm. Drummond, 1874, appears to refer this epistle to the date 1619-1620. There is a copy of the Edition of Drayton's "Poems collected into one volume," with title bearing date 1620, in the Grenville Library, and a copy of the same Edition, with title bearing date 1619, in the British Museum Library: but the Epistle "on Poets and Poesie" is not in either. We believe it was first printed in 1627.

PAGE 336.

This forcible passage contains an evident quotation from Hamlet, ii, 3:

But that the dread of fomething after death. The undifcovered Countrey, from whofe Borne No Traveller returnes, Puzels the will, &c.

(Fo., 1623.)

It is quoted in the Academy, January 31, 1874, p. 121.

PAGE 338.

The allusion is to the well-known question of Falstaff in I Henry IV, iii, 3.

PAGE 338.

This is the latest discovered mention of Shakespeare that has turned up since we commenced our Centurie. It was communicated to the Athenæum (September 19, 1874) by its discoverer, Mr. George Bullen, the courteous Superintendent of the Reading Room at the British Museum, to whom we are indebted for valuable aid in our search for extracts. From the Athenæum notice we take the following remarks.

"This being a comedy, fo called, and by J. S., one is at first inclined to think that it was most likely written by James Shirley; but upon examination, it will be feen not to bear any traces of Shirley's style. It is, in fact, more in the nature of a droll, fuch as those published by Kirkman in 1673,—'The Wits or sport upon fport,'-as fpecimens of the mutilated fort of stage-plays that were exhibited by ftealth during the time (1642-60) in which ftage-plays were prohibited by ordinance of the Lords and Commons. Although in five acts, the play is very brief, containing only fourteen pages altogether. The hero of it, Capt. Hinde, a famous highwayman, was faid, at the time when it was published, to have accompanied Charles the Second in his wanderings after the Battle of Worcester, and to have actually escorted the Prince and Wilmot to London itself. At least, so it was put forth, but with no ground of truth, in the newspapers of the time. In accordance with this belief, Charles the Second is introduced as one of the characters in the play, under the title of the 'King of Scots.' This is almost conclusive against the fupposition that Shirley, who was a devoted Cavalier, was the author of the piece, as he would fcarcely have deemed it refpectful to his fovereign to introduce him as the companion of a notorious highwayman. Moreover, Dyce, in his edition of Shirley, takes no notice of this piece, although he took pains to collect everything that might fairly be attributed to his author. Hinde was afterwards hung, drawn, and quartered, not for his highway robberies, but for his high treafon, and there are fome verses upon him, 'by a poet of his own time,' inserted in Johnfon's 'Lives of the Highwaymen,' which remind one strongly of Wordfworth's lines on Rob Roy."

Additions and Corrections

TO THE

ELUCIDATIONS.

--0-

PAGE 3.

Kind-Harts Dreame is undated: but the address "To the Gentlemen Readers" and the entry in the Stationers' Books prove that the tract was written between the date of Robert Greene's death and December in the same year, i. e., 1592. It was, probably, published in the following year. We were under the impression that the British Museum copy which we used was not the first edition. We are now disposed to believe that it is.

PAGE 4.

Strictly speaking Englandes Mourning Garment is undated and anonymous. But Theorder and proceeding at the Funerall, &c. (which follows the main work), has the date of Queen Elizabeth's burial, "28 of April, 1603;" and the postscript thereto, "To the Reader," is signed "Hen: Chetle."

PAGE 5.

The entire refrain is as follows:

"Lament, lament, lament, you English Peeres.

Lament your loffe { poffefft } fo many yeares."

PAGE 8.

We are unable to verify Steevens' note, or collate his copy: for the book which contained Harvey's note (a copy of Speght's Chaucer, 1598) passed into the collection of Bishop Percy; and his library was burnt in the fire at Northumberland House. The editors of the Clarendon Press edition of Hamlet (Preface, p. ix) remark: "Steevens attributed to the note the date of the book, but Malone has shown that, although Harvey may have purchased the volume in 1598, there is nothing to prove that he wrote the note till after 1600, in which year Fairfax's translation of Tasso, mentioned in another note, was published."

PAGE 9.

Carew's discourse was first printed in the edition of Camden's Remaines which has the date 1614. Our date 1605 (that of the first edition of the Remaines) was an inadvertence. In the extract "Barlow" is the old misprint for Marlow. The fragment is his Hero and Leander, completed by Chapman at one time, and by Pettowe at another.

PAGE 10.

Three verses in Colin Clout's come home againe, viz., those on Amyntas (who is Ferdinando Earl of Derby), must have been written April 16, 1594, when Lord Derby (formerly Lord Strange) died. Todd and others have inferred from this that the poem, which was first printed in 1595, was really written in the preceding year: and that in the date appended to the dedication 1591 is a press-error for 1594. We adopted this view; but we are now convinced that Spenser had finished the first draft of his poem in January, 1591, and subsequently amplified it. Some have seen a discrepancy between the date appended to that dedication, and that appended to the dedication of Daphnaida: but if, as Mr. Hales believes, the latter work is alluded to in the former, January and December, 1591 must be legal old style dates, the year beginning with the former and ending with the latter month.

PAGE 29.

Poems in divers humors is the fourth tract in a volume of which the first bears Richard Barnefield's name. We should have given it in brackets.

Pages 30 & 31.

The passages are in the edition of the Scourge of Villanie published in 1598, but less correctly printed.

PAGE 45.

"The quene" here mentioned is Anne of Denmark, the Queen of James I. A wood-cut facsimile of this letter, traced by Mr. E. W. Ashbee, forms the frontispiece of the large-paper copies of our work.

PAGE 74 (on page 18).

Sir Egerton Brydges assigns this "Epicedium" to Harbert; Mr. W. B. Rye simply corroborated the suggestion of Brydges (Restituta, 1815, vol. iii, p. 298).

PAGE 75 (on page 19).

We hastily accepted Drake's assertion, that Drayton's reference to the Rape of Lucrece (if it be that) was "in this impression (1594) and solely in this impression" (Shakspeare and his Times, vol. iii, p. 39). As a matter of fact it is in the edition of 1596.

PAGE 81 (on page 48).

We might have quoted as a pendant to the extract from Ratseis Ghost, the following from The Returne from Pernassus, 1606:

Studiofo. Fayre fell good Orpheus, that would rather be King of a mole hill, then a Keyfars flave: Better it is mongst fidlers to be chiefe, Then at [a] plaiers trencher beg reliefe. But ift not ftrange this [thefe] mimick apes should prize Unhappy Schollers at a hireling rate. Vile world, that lifts them up to hye degree, And treades us downe in groveling mifery. England affordes those glorious vagabonds, That carried earst their fardels on their backes, Coursers to ride on through the gazing streetes, Sooping it in their glaring Satten futes, And Pages to attend their Maisterships: With mouthing words that better wits have framed, They purchase lands, and now Esquires are made. Philomufus. What ere they feeme being even at the best They are but sporting fortunes scornfull jests. Stud. So merry fortune is wont from ragges to take, Some ragged grome, and him some gallant make. (Actus 5, scena 1.)

This will also serve to strengthen our assertions on pages 72 and 231.

PAGE 163 (on page 87).

The converse misprint occurs in The Playhouse Pocket Companion, 1779 [12mo], in the first line of which "Sophocles" is an error for Socrates. (See Biog. Dram: 1812. Int: lxxiii.)

PAGE 164 (on page 89).

After the first line of our extract, Mr. Collier's version (History of the Stage, I, 430, note) has the following four lines:

Which he reviv'd to be revived foe No more — young Hamlett, old Hieronymoe, King Lear, the creuel Moore, and more befide That lived in him have now for ever dyde.

This interpolation is, to us, evidently spurious.

Other differences in Mr. Collier's copy are these:

"us'd" is altered to . seem'd
"crewes" sad crew

"did but seeme". . . but seem'd

"he had bene deade". even then hee dyed.

All the further additions in the expanded version given by Mr. Collier, New Particulars, pp. 29-31, are in our opinion modern fabrications.

PAGE 178 (on page 115).

As we have given an example of the heroic employment of the phrase to shake a spear, we add one of the mock-heroic, from Histrio-mastix, or the Player Whipt, 4to, 1610, the work mentioned on page 182 (Elucidations to the extracts on pages 124 & 127).

Enter Troylus and Cressida.

Troy. Come Cressida my Cresset light,
Thy face doth shine both day and night,
Behold, behold, thy garter blue,
Thy knight his valiant elboe weares,
That When he shakes his surious Speare,
The foe in shivering fearefull fort,
May lay him downe in death to snort.
Cres. O Knight with vallour in thy sace,
Here take my skreene weare it for grace,
Within thy Helmet put the same,
Therewith to make thine enemies lame.
Land. Lame stuffe indeed the like was never heard.

(Sig. C. 4 recto.)

The knight is Post-haste, in whom Mr. Richard Simpson sees a caricature of Shakespeare. The four lines here spoken by Troylus contain the supposed allusion to an incident in Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida, which we believe to be rebutted by the dates.

PAGE 232 (on page 209).

In the third line of this note, "first" is a press error for jest.

PAGE 312.

We must not omit to notice the tradition of a letter written by the King to Shakespeare.

In the Advertisement to Lintot's Edition of Shakespeare's Poems, 1709 [8vo], we read:

"That most learned prince, and great patron of learning, King James the First, was pleased with his own hand to write an amicable letter to Mr. Shakespeare; which letter, though now lost, remained long in the hands of Sir William D'Avenant, as a credible person, now living, can testify."

Oldys, in a manuscript note on his copy of Fuller's Worthies, says, that "the story came from the Duke of Buckingham, [i.e. Sheffield] who had it from Sir William D'Avenant."

Index to Authors.

					PAGE
Anton, Robert -	-	-	-	-	- 333
Aubrey, John -	-	-	-	-	- 293
BAKER, Sir Richard	-	-	-	-	- 219
Bancroft, Thomas -	-	-	-	-	- 139
Banks, John	-	-	-	-	- 300
Barkstead, William	-	-	-	-	- 50
Barnefield, Richard	-	-	-	-	- 29
Bass, William -	-	-	-	-	- 90
Bell, William -	-	-	-	-	- 210
Benson, John -	-	-	-	-	- 142
Berkenhead, J	-	-	-	-	- 199
Brathwaite, Richard	-	-	-	-	- 66
Brome, Alexander -	-	-	-	-	- 214
Brome, Richard -	-	-	-	-	- 141
Brooke, Christopher	-		-	~	- 65
Buck, Sir George	-	-	-	-	- 197
Burton, Robert -	-	-	-	-	- 107
CAMDEN, William -		_	-	_	- 47
Carew, Richard -	-	-	-	-	- 9
Cartwright, William	-	-	-	-	- 198
Cavendish, Margaret	-	-	-	-	- 251
Chamberlain, Robert	-	-	~	-	- 138
Chettle, Henry -	_		-	-	3 & 4
Chetwood, Knightly	-	-	-	-	- 301
Chillingworth, William	-	-	-	-	- 136
CU 1 117'11'	_	-			- 21

Cokaine, Sir Aston	-	125—218
To Philip Massenger A Preludium to Richard Brome's Plays
To William Dugdale To John Honyman	-	216
To Clement Fisher	-	218
Cooke, J	•	- 202
Cope, Sir Walter	-	- 45
Cornwallis, Sir William	-	- 334
Cowley, Abraham	-	- 291
Crown, J.	_	- 297
DAVENANT, Sir William	-	- 153
Davies, John (of Hereford)	-	4144
The Civile Warres of Death and Fortu	ne	41
Microcosmos
The Scourge of Folly		43
Papers Complaint	-	44
Davies, Richard		- 308
Dekker, Thomas	-	- 329
Denham, Sir John	-	- 195
Digges, Leonard	-	143 & 145
Dowdall, John	-
Drayton, Michael		19 & 335
	-
Dryden, John		00
Of Dramatick Poesie		255
Prologue to The Tempest -		256
Prologue to Julius Cæsar	-	258
Prologue to Julius Cæsar Defence of the Epilogue	-	260
Prologue to the University of Oxford	-	264
Prologue to Charles D'Avenant's Circe	-	265
Preface to All for Love	-
Preface to Troilus and Cressida -		267
Prologue to Troilus and Cressida	-	276
Prologue to Aureng-zebe	-	277
Prologue to the University of Oxford	-	270
Prologue to The Mistakes Epistle to Sir Godfrey Kneller	-	2/9
Dugdale, Sir William	-	- 220

Evelyn, John	-	•	-	-	-	248 &	249
FELTHAM, Owen	-	-	-	-	-	118 &	131
Field, Nathaniel	_		-	-	_	_	110
Flecknoe, Richard	_	_	-		_	-	239
Fletcher, Joseph	_	_	_	_	_	-	61
Freeman, Thomas						_	63
·	-	-	-	-	_		_
Fuller, Thomas	-	-	-	-	-	-	115
Fulman, William	-	-	-	-		-	308
GREENE, Robert	-	-	-	-	-	-	I
HABINGTON, Willi	iam	_	_	-	_	-	127
Harbert, Sir Willia	ım	-	-	-	_	-	18
	_	_	_	_	_	6	& 8
Heminge, John and		dell.	Henri	e	_		£ 94
Heywood, Thomas		,				y	- 27
The Fair Mai	d of th	e Excl	iange	-	_	53
Apology for A					-	54
The Hierarch	ie of th	ne Bles	sed A	igels	-	128
Holland, Hugh	_	_	_	_	_	_	105
Holland, Samuel	_	_	_	_	_		222
Hood, Eu	_	_	_	_	_	_	89
	_	_	_		_		-
Howell, James	-	-	-	-	-	-	196
JAMES, Richard	-	-	-	-	-	-	106
Johnson, John	-	-	-	-	-	~	152
Jonson, Ben
Every Man in	his H	umour.	Prolo	gue	-	36
Every Man or					-	3 7
Bartholomew				-	-	62
Conversations				-	-	88
Lines on Droe				-	-	97
"To the Mem						98
The Staple of						102
Timber, or D				onak	e-	103
speare no Ode appended		e New		-	_	103
Seignus his Fa						330

		334	r
						P	AGE
Jordan, Thomas	-	-	-	-	-	-	250
LANGBAINE, Willi	am	-	_	-	-	-	309
L'Estrange, Sir Ni		ıs	-	-	-	-	209
MACHIN, Lewis	-	-	-	-	-	-	51
Manningham, John	l	•	-	-	-	-	35
Marston, John	-	-	-	-	-	30-	-32
The Scourge of	of Vill		Satire Satire		_	о 1
What you will				_	_	2
•		-					0
Martyn, John and	other	:S	-	-		-	-
Mayne, Jasper	-	-	-	-		30 &
Meres, Francis	-	-	-	-	. 2	25 &	328
Mervyn, James	-	-	-	-	-		135
Milton, John
Epitaph on S L'Allegro -	-	-		-	- 20	14 00
'Εικονοκλά	στης	-	-	-	- 20	./1
NASH, Thomas	-	-	-	-			327
OTWAY, Thomas	-	-	-	-	-	-	290
PEELE, George	-	-	-	-	-	-	49
Pepys, Samuel	-	-	-	-	-	. -	242
Phillips, Edward	-	-	-	-	- 2	81 &	282
Prujean, Thomas	-	-	-	-	-	-	193
Prynne, William	-		••	-	-	-	124
						_	133
RAMSAY, H.	٠.	-	-	-	_	_
Ravenscroft, Edw	ard	-	-	-	-	-	305
Raynsford, Sir Ge	eorge	-	-	-	-	-	298
Robinson, Thoma	ıs	-	-	-	-	-	111
Rochester, Earl o	f	-	-	-	-	-	286
Rowley, William	-	-	-	-	-	-	126
Rymer, Thomas	-	-	-	-	-	-	288

							PAGE
Shakespeare, W	'illian	ı
Epitaph on B	en Jon	son -	-	-	-	208
Upon the Kin			-	-	-	5
Upon Poesy	-		-	-	-	342
Scoloker, Anthony	,		~	-	-	-	46
Scrope, Sir Carr	••	-	-	-	-	-	288
Scudery, George	-		-		-	-	296
Shadwell, Thomas	-	-	-	-	-	-	287
Sheffield, John	-	-	-	-	-	-	299
Sheppard, Samuel	-	-	-	~	-	203-	206
The Times Di	isplaye	:d -	_	-		203
Epigrams -			- 2	04, 205	, &	206
Shirley, James	-	-	-	-	-	157 &	194
Southwell, Robert	-	-	-	-	-	-	20
Spenser, Edmund	-	-	-	-	-	_	10
Stow, John -	-	-	-	-	-	_	viii
Suckling, Sir John		-	-	-	_	154 &	156
Ç. •
TATE, Nahum	-	-	-	-	-	306 &	307
Tatham, Jo	-	-	-	-	-	-	213
Taylor, John (the	Water	r-Poet	t)	-	-	112 &
Taylor, Robert	-	-	-	-		-
Temple, Sir Willia	ım	-	-	-	_	_	292
Terrent, T	-	_	-	_	-	134 &	184
Thorpe, Thomas	-	-	-	-	-	_	55
Tofte, Robert	-	-	-	-	_	-	28
,
VENDENHEYM, Ha	ins Ja	cob V	Vurm	sser v	on	-	59
	·
WARD, John	-	-		-	-	~	241
Warren, John	-	-	-	-	-	-	149
Webster, John	-	-	-	-	-	-	60
Weever, John	-	-	-	-	_	-	23
Willobie, Henry	-		-	-	-	-	12
Winstanley Willia		_	_	•-	_	_	302

Index to Authors' Anitials.

0-

D (C) [Click 1 D 1 1 (m) or	PAGE
B. (C.) [Christopher Brooke] "The Ghost of
Richard the third"	65
B. (W.) [William Bass] "On Mr. William	,
Shakespeare"	90
C. (I.) "Epigrames"	22
C. (I.) "Saint Mary Magdalens Conversion" -	40
C. (R.) [Richard Carew]	9
C. (R.) [Robert Chamberlain] "Conceits," &c.	138
C.(W.)[probablyWilliam Clarke]"Polimanteia"	21
H.(Eu.)[Eu. Hood]"On ye death of R. Burbadge"	89
Har. (W.) [probably Sir William Harbert] "Epi-	-)
cedium"	18
I. M. S. "On Worthy Master Shakespeare and his Poems"	120
J. (W.) "The Whipping of the Satyre"	38
M. (J.) "The Newe Metamorphosis" -	33
M.(I.) "To the Memorie of M.W. Shake-speare"	106
M. (T.) "The Blacke Book"	338
S. (J.) "The Prince of Priggs revells" -	338
T. (R.) [Robert Tofte]	28
T. (T.) [Thomas Thorpe]	55

Anonymous Works

(IN THE ORDER OF QUOTATION).

		I	PAGE
A Mournefull Dittie	-	-	5
Commendatory Verses prefixed to "	Will	obie
his Avisa"	-	-	11
A Poetical Revenge	-	-	34
The Returne from Pernassus	-	39 &	347
Ratseis Ghost	-	-	48
Address prefixed to Shakespeare's '	' Tro	ilus
and Cressida," 1609	-9	-	56
Pimlyco		-	58
Christe's Bloodie Sweat	-	-	61
New and Choice Characters	-	-	67
Inscription on Shakespeare's Tombston	ne -	-	68
Inscription under Shakespeare's Bust	-	-	87
Commendatory Verses prefixed to the F	olio i	1623	119
A Banquet of Jests, &c	-	-	137
Witts Recreations, selected &c	-		140
An Elegy on the Death of Shakespeare	e -	-	150
Mercurius Britannicus	-	-	191
Dedication of Beaumont and Fletcher'	s Wo	rks,
1647	-	-	194
Epitaph on Ben Jonson (Ashmole MS.)	-	208
A Hermeticall Banquet	-	-	212
Choyce Drollery	-	-	221
Address prefixed to Brome's Plays -	-	-	224
A Catch	-	-	225
The Puritan, or the Widow of Watling	g Stre	eet -	331
The London Post	-	-	330
The Hectors, or the False Challenge	~.	-	337
,

List of Exclusions.

----()----

I. IRRELEVANT ALLUSIONS.

The Schoole of Abuse: by Stephen Gosson	1579
("Some plaiers modest, if I be not deceived.")
Letter from Sir Philip Sidney to Secretary Walsingham, dated "Utrecht, this 24th of March"	1586
(Mentioning "Will, my lord of Lester's jesting plaier.")
The Anatomie of Absurditie: by Thomas Nash	1589
An Epistle to the Gentlemen Students of the
Two Universities: by Thomas Nash -	1589
(This is prefixed to Robert Greene's Menaphon. It contains the famous passage on "English Seneca," and "whole hamlets; I should say, handfuls, of tragical speeches." Compare an epigram "of one yt had stolne much out of Seneca," in the Dr. Farmer Chetham MS. ed. Grosart, vol. i, p. 84.)
The Teares of the Muses: by Edmond Spenser	1590
(Mentioning "Our pleasant Willy.")
Wits Miserie and the Worlds Madnesse: by Thomas Lodge	1596
The Poetaster: by Ben Jonson	1601
Paper's Complaint: by John Davies, of Hereford	1611
Sir Thomas Smithe's Voiage and Entertainment
in Rushia	1605
Bel-man's Night Walkes: by Thomas Dekker	1612
The Night Raven: by Samuel Rowlands -	1620
(In each of the last three works is a Hamlet allusion.)

Essayes and Characters: by J. Stephens - 1615

(He was friend to Ben Jonson, and himself the author of one long tragedy, Cythia's Revenge. See Notes and Queries, 4th S., iii, 550. We have rejected this work from our catena with great hesitation and regret.)

II. SPURIOUS ALLUSIONS.

The Two Maids of Moreclack: by Thomas Greene.

(Containing lines mentioning "our swan of Avon:" attributed by Steevens to the editor, William Chetwood.)

Letter from Macklin the comedian.

(Containing verses subscribed Thomas May and Endymion Porter, mentioning "Shakspeare" and "Avon's Swan," attributed by Malone to Macklin.)

Song on Sir Thomas Lucy, attributed to John Jordan of Stratford-upon-Avon.

(The Oldys Manuscripts are said to contain one stanza: other verses are quoted by William Chetwood in a Manuscript History of the Stage 1730. This man stood sponsor to Tonson's edition of Shakespeare, 1735.)

Epigrams by Ben Jonson and Shakespeare: quoted, and nostro judicio fabricated, by Steevens (see ante, p. 323).

Lines on the Death of Burbage: published by Mr. J. P. Collier (see p. 164 & 348).

Cum multis allis.

Postscript.

--0--

UT little has been done towards tracing the influence of Shake-speare's works on his successors of the seventeenth century. As a very small contribution to such a work take the following:

I.—Don Quijote, Parte II, 1615, has traces of As you like it and Macbeth.

(See Mr.Rawdon Brown's letter in the Athenæum, July 5th, 1873.)

2.—The Two Angrie Women of Abington, by Henry Porter, 1599, seems to quote from Romeo and Juliet, and has a trace of Hamlet.

(See Rimbault's edition, 1841, pp. 73 & 81.)

3.—Acolastus his After-witte, by S. N., 1600, imitates a line in 3 Henry VI, and appropriates whole passages out of Shakespeare's Lucrece.

(See Collier's B. & C. Account, vol. i, additions, p. xxviii*.)

- 4.—'Tis Merrie when Gossips meet, by Samuel Rowlands, 1602, has traces of The Two Gentlemen of Verona and Romeo and Juliet.
- 5.—The Insatiate Countess, 1603, imitates a line in King John.

6.—The Legend of Cupid and Psyche, by Shakerley Marmion, 1637, imitates a passage in Hamlet, and bears the trace of another.

(See Singer's edition, 1820, pp. 32 & 33.)

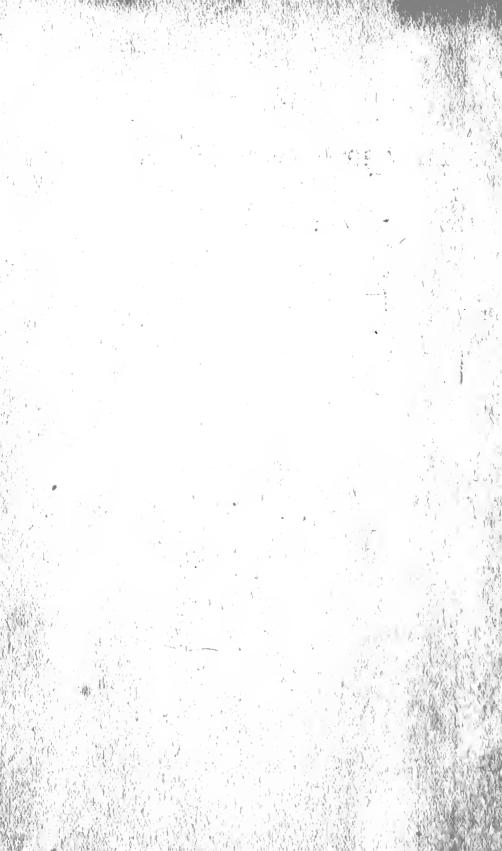

- 7.—Lucrecia, part of The Heroinæ, 1639, by G. Rivers, appropriates many phrases from Shakespeare's Lucrece.
- 8.—The Jews Tragedy, by William Heminge, 1662, imitates a line in Hamlet.

(See Collier's B. & C. Account, vol. i, additions, p. xix*.)

FINIS.

PR Ingleby, Clement Mansfield 2925 Shakespeare's centurie of 16 prayse

PLEASE DO NOT REMOVE CARDS OR SLIPS FROM THIS POCKET

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO LIBRARY

D RANGE BAY SHLF POS ITEM C 39 14 13 24 03 021 9 UTL AT DOWNSVIEW